THOR PUTS OLD SOL TO ROUT

Old Sol and J. Phyl have been having a merry war of it during the past two days and for a time this morning J. P. roared Sol hot he was forced to call upon Thor to help him out. Try as he could he couldn't get his sprinkling can to do the work so he called upon Thor with his thunder clouds who, with his trusty hammer, shattered the might of the Dispenser of Heat. Thor had the sympathies of the populace with him who watched with eagerness the progress of the battle since he rolled his first dark lined cohorts above the horizon Thursday afternoon.

Thor first rallied his thunder hosts at the southern end of the valley and began an assault but he only drenched the southern end of the valley before Sol dropped below the western sky line. But bright and early today Thor renewed the attack and now seems to have Sol on the run. Light thunder showers were general over the valley today and cooled the weather considerably. Thursday the thermometer went crazy with the heat and touched 99. Had it not been for the battle in the heavens the mercury would probably have touched the 100 mark although the relative humidity kept the heat from being oppressive. A fair sky is predicted for tomorrow with cooler weather. The mercury will be considerably lower today.
