Quigley, a nurse, who had been employed in St. Anne's hospital at Juneau, Alaska, is today under a conviction of larceny for passing off as his own, a draft belonging to Paul Backe, a patient. Backe died at the hospital from a wound inflicted by himself after shooting his wife. Quigley claims that he came into the possession of the draft to take care of Backe's remains. AT THE UGO

Too much wooing of Handsome Dan. The girls all know Dan is handsome and he knows it himself. They mistrust him as a flirt. He happens into the general store and sees an announcement that each package of "Pancake Flour" contains a beautiful diamond ring. This gives him an idea, he purchases a whole case, opens the boxes and well supplied with rings he starts out to engage himself to all the pretty girls in town. He hugs and kisses each one in turn before starting for the next victim. He enjoys himself immensely and goes back to the store to tell the boys. One of the girls overhears his brag. She tells all the other girls and they get together. One of them writes Dan to meet her. They all mount their horses and on their way to the trying place, stop at Maggie Smithers. Maggie is an old maid, very anxious to marry, when they tell her that Handsome Dan wishes to marry her, she jumps at the chance. Dan sees them coming, jumps on his horse and gives them a chase. One of the girls lassos him and he is threatened with lynching. They offer to let him off with his life if he will marry Maggie. Grabbing him they douse him in the horse trough until he agrees to accept their alternative. A minister steps forward, marries Maggie to Dan. The girls depart satisfied that the punishment fits the crime.
