INSANITY PREVAILED IN JOHN SCHRANK'S FAMILY

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—Old acquaintances here of John Schrank, who fired a bullet into Colonel Theodore Roosevelt's body, at Milwaukee Monday evening, today say insanity has prevailed in the Schrank family for three generations. Dominick and Anna Flammang, Schrank's uncle and aunt, brought him to America in 1883. He was called John Flammang until his uncle gave him a saloon, when he began using his own name.

Saved by Spectacle Case

Dr. Woods Hutchinson, a Roosevelt man and a writer of note, visited the colonel this morning, bringing a message of sympathy and good wishes from New York progressives. Dr. Murphy, Dr. Lambert and Dr. Hutchinson all agreed that Colonel Roosevelt's life was saved by the steel spectacle case which deflected the bullet.

King Alfonso of Spain cabled today a note of sympathy to Colonel Roosevelt. The former president said that he felt badly.

Albert Martin, secretary to Theodore Roosevelt, is intercepting all packages addressed to the colonel containing eatables. The authorities at Mercy Hospital are refusing all other delicacies.

At 11 o'clock Mrs. Roosevelt was at her husband's bedside. Mrs. Langworth and Miss Ethel Roosevelt drove about the city in an automobile.

LAST TRIBUTE BY FRIENDS TO KIRBY MILLER

Funeral services for the late Kirby S. Miller were conducted at the family residence near Medford yesterday afternoon, by Dr. Geo. Rebec, of the University of Oregon. The services were held at two o'clock, and were attended by a large gathering of Mr. Miller's friends and neighbors. The pall-bearers were Herbert S. Parsons, Ralph Bardwell, Paul Jauney, A. C. Randall, Alan Brackinreed and Henry Ramsey. Porter Neff sang the favorite hymn of the deceased, "Lead Kindly Light."

The body was sent to Portland for cremation, in accordance with the expressed wishes of Mr. Miller. Cremation will take place on Friday. Mr. Neff accompanied the body; he will be joined in Portland by a brother and sister of Mrs. Miller, who are coming from Chicago, and who will accompany Mr. Neff on his return to this city.

Dr. Rebec's Remarks

Dr. Rebec said in part: "Born in the border south, and having his college years at Washington and Lee university of Virginia, where the spirit of Robert E. Lee and of the very best of the old south was all-pervasive, Mr. Miller remained to the end a southern man in his central conceptions of personal honor and deep, essential courtesy and chivalry."

As a young man he chose for his vocation the ministry, because he was drawn to it by the deep inner current of his being, which was not always guessed by those who saw him in the vimful bustle and practicalities of later years. But the key to Mr. Miller's personality, and to his whole growth, is his remarkable combining within himself of two mental types which usually are divergent. On the other hand was his absolute sense that at the heart of it life is a matter of the spirit and of spiritual values, values ethical, cultural and religious. And on the other hand, the imperative need of action—the homely, everyday action that fills the days of normal, ordinary men.

Joined the Presbyterians

Perhaps it was the active energy of the Presbyterian type of religious man which first drew him to that church. In his first pastorate, however, in a suburban residential town of Baltimore, the trait which left its deeper impress was his most unusual genius for binding himself to strong men in enduring friendship. A man utterly indifferent to mere popularity, often brusque, and mercilessly candid in statement, whose motto was "What I care is to get action," yet Mr. Miller never lived in a community without becoming, not so much a mere comrade as a repository of their lives, a counselor and a tower of strength to a circle of superior natures.

But the experience of Bell Aire brought home to him the perception that sooner or later comes to every thoughtful modern man, that the good of the world is to be attained, not alone through individual virtues and pieties, but through social action. Social action seemed to him the peculiar call of our generation. In response to this call within himself, he sought a freer field in a so-called more liberal Presbyterian church in the neighborhood of Chicago. Here he, an obscure young clergyman, soon proved his new faith by projecting himself, singlehanded, into an election campaign against a multi-millionaire, come to that community solely for the purpose of buying himself a place in congress. Money and party majority won the battle for the millionaire, but the meagerness of the majority left the moral victory with the young preacher.

Education as Uplift

But during this second pastorate, too, there was born in Mr. Miller the perception of education as the supreme instrument of social uplift. From this time on education may be said to have become his avocation. He devoured educational literature, pondered educational subjects, and mingled in educational affairs. It was the objectifying and socializing of his spiritual interests that led him still again to seek a freer church connection, where the emphasis would be thrown less on mere personal subjective states, and more upon the larger outward life. He went to Duluth, to the pastorate of the Unitarian church of that city.

But Duluth proved again but a stage in his unweary quest. He felt the need of relief from profession, and a turning in upon an unhampered personal thought. Still more he felt the necessity, not alone of social action, but the homely everyday action that makes the common lot of the average practical man. Hence his coming to Oregon, and leading for two years the almost primitive life of a small fruit ranch, and afterwards, in due course, with a zeal and energy we all know, into the large organization of the fruit activities of the Rogue Valley, and indeed of the whole northwest.

Phase of Evolution

All this, from one point of view, represented a personal quest and personal growth on Mr. Miller's part; but on the other hand meant what he laid so much store by, action and results. Mr. Miller never regarded our peculiar northwestern fruitgrowers' life and business otherwise than as one phase of our national new experimenting and evolution. He was wont to say: "It's a part of the problem of democracy." Indeed, no one understood Mr. Miller who did not catch the note in his convictions that every significant part of the homeliest, everyday business of men is a thing of spiritual implication, indeed the way ultimately to put the spiritual values on a sure footing.

In a moment of intimacy, he used sometimes to say: "Personally I feel that this turmoil of outer affairs in which I am bustling about is a stage out of which must emerge a dominant inner note. I am still a parson, and who knows but some day, out of this experience of the world, I may find a new voice and a new authority to go forth and preach in some sort." The preaching he had in mind was really not that of the pulpit, but of the new, vital, social and practically human idealism—the gospel of the spirituality of the common-place. Indeed, he had already begun, not preaching, but action of an explicit sort in this field. Through his interest in his favorite region of education, even the duties of a local school board clerk were not too humble for him; while the weight that he had come to have in the larger educational affairs of the state is testified to by his election last spring to the presidency of the Education Reform League of Oregon, an organization made up of representative men from all parts of the state, pledging themselves to the cause of the democratic rebuilding more especially of higher education, but likewise all education, in harmony with our new democrathe political and social trend.

Part in State Affairs

To Mr. Miller's influence, more than to any other person's, was due the injection into the so-called millage tax bill campaign, its three largest ideas, namely: First, that it should not be a mere immediate settlement of higher educational difficulties, but a program of future development; second, that the state's higher educational forces must be co-ordinated and brought under the control of one strong body; third, that that body shall have impressed upon it the duty of calling to its help expert counsel.

By a prophetic coincidence, a committee of this league, on the very last afternoon of his life, sent from Portland a long telegram, requesting his endorsement of certain proposed important steps. Action and searching inwardness, those were the two sides of this complex man. If any other trait marked him, it was impatience of subjectivities and sentimental self-consciousness. So far as his mere personal destiny was concerned, he viewed life like a soldier; his place

Don't Blame Your Over Worked Stomach

When your stomach will not digest food, the worst thing you can do is to take a lot of digestive medicines. True, they give temporary relief, but your stomach is the sufferer. Loss of appetite, indigestion, dyspepsia and headaches can only be permanently relieved by removing the cause. In many cases, various remedies taken to relieve these conditions result in ruining the stomach and preventing it from digesting food in a natural way.

If you want your stomach to do its own work properly, without resorting to artificial digestives or predigested foods, use Jayne's Tonic Vermifuge. Take small doses regularly, preferably before meals. In a little time your stomach will again do its own work and you will eat heartily, keep well and enjoy living. Jayne's Tonic Vermifuge is not a digester in itself, but it tones up to the stomach and intestines, giving you all the nutriment and strength from the food you eat.

Many forms of supposed indigestion are the result of intestinal parasites, for which Jayne's Tonic Vermifuge is unsurpassed. Insist on Jayne's; accept no other. Millions have praised it for more than eighty years. Sold by druggists everywhere. Dr. D. Jayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa.
