Taft's Idea of Campaign

science of advertising and publicity that so many industrial firms have had occasion to make. The great difficulty in such campaigns, is the expense. A campaign conducted in forty-eight states necessarily involves the expenditure of vast amounts. At times it seems more or less easy to raise considerable sums by popular subscription, but in the past the subscriptions by comparatively few persons of large financial means, engaged in enterprises which might have such relations with the government as to be affected favorably or unfavorably by governmental action. This has given rise to questions of motives, many of which are unfounded, that are likely to make the collection of funds most difficult.

"What do you think," the president was asked, "of the effect of personalities in a political campaign?"

President Taft answered: "I doubt whether personalities have anything like the effect which those who use them think they have. Sometimes there is a real revelation of the character of a candidate, and so clearly proven to his detriment that he suffers. Ordinarily, the use of epithets and personal attacks on candidates only anger their friends and gratify their enemies but do not affect indifferent ones. These attacks lower the tone of discussion and divert the attention of the public from the real facts at issue. For what reason, the few personalities injected into the campaign, the better, as the publisher is more than likely to reach a sound and just conclusion."

Asked if the people still expected dignity in high office, the president answered: "Certainly, I am convinced that even the humblest voter wishes high officers of the government to conduct themselves with dignity, and to refrain from descending to personalities which ordinarily we would not associate with men in prominent, conspicuous and official positions. I believe the people are sensitive on this subject. I am glad to think this is true, because when the people tolerate lack of dignity and self respect in high offices, they are losing their ideals of standards and lowering them."

ARGUMENTS IN BECKER CASE

me to say that I saw the murder, and said I would be in bed with them if I did not. They said they had gotten Becker into it. They admitted they had framed him, but said they knew enough to get out of it themselves."

BOURNE TOLD BY MCCLURE OF SCIENTIFIC COIN

Senator Jonathan Bourne and E. L. McClure engaged in a friendly discussion of scientific money Monday in the lobby of the Medford Hotel, where a large delegation of Senator Bourne's friends had assembled at a reception in his honor. Bourne claimed that the financial condition of this country was never equalled in the world's history. The treasury was bursting with a hoard of gold greater than any country ever possessed, and the bountiful crops and products from gigantic industries of every kind added tens of billions to the wealth of the country annually. The money question needed attention, but the disturbance of financial conditions from political agitation and excitement caused by the presidential election, would postpone any legislation upon the subject for three years. The Aldrich-Vreeland plan was the most comprehensive yet presented, and Congress would eventually give the country a sound and abundant money circulation that would prevent disasters in the future from periodic recurrence as in the past.

McClure asserted the invisible government, (money power) regulated the circulation of money as positively as the pressure of steam, the government had nothing to say about it, and could not put a dollar of its hoard of gold in circulation in a panic, but had to place it in the hands of the very authors of the panic. Money circulation could not be regulated or controlled while gold was the standard of value and there was no remedy but to destroy money power by making the standard of value fixed and unchangeable.

Mr. Bourne asked how that could be done. Have you such a remedy? Mr. McClure said no commodity standard was capable of being fixed and unchangeable in value, but the nation could demonetize gold, and make the nation's time notes the standard of value—a full legal tender for the payment of all debts public and private—and eliminate all other money from circulation. With each money issue, issue an equal amount of bonds, pay all disbursements from the treasury in money, and place the bonds in depositaries, where bonds could be obtained for money or money for bonds, on demand without cost. Forty or fifty thousand millions of money supply would place money in reach of every person with wealth to exchange beyond any possibility of manipulation, which would place money in reach of all as positively as weights and measures.

Mr. Bourne objected that there would be no value in paper money without specie behind it—foreign countries would not accept it in payment of their demands on this country—our credit would be destroyed with the rest of the world, etc.

Mr. McClure asked if J. D. Rockefeller's note for $10,000 would be worth its face in any bank in the United States? (God help the bank)

Stubborn Colds May Lead to Consumption Did you ever have a cold that would not let go; a cough that persisted; that prevented sleep and made waking hours miserable? Eckman's Alternative is the proper remedy in such cases. Perhaps some dimly-remembered medicine may be effective where it is the medicine in the throat; but when your chest is sore and simple remedies don't answer—then take Eckman's Alternative. Neglect often leads to more serious trouble: a case in point follows: "Gentlemen: In July, 1905, I had noticed the conditions that showed I had Consumption. I lost weight rapidly; had a hollow cough, hemorrhages and very severe night sweats. My brother recommended Eckman's Alternative. In the fall of 1905, I began to take it. At this time I am perfectly well and robust. My appetite is good and my weight has increased from 110 to 140 pounds. Not a trace of my old trouble remains. I will gladly express the merits of this medicine to anyone." (Signed) M. L. GERHART, Eckman's Alternative is effective in Bronchitis, Asthma, Hay Fever, Throat and Lung Troubles, and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain poison, opiates or habit-forming drugs. Ask for booklet telling of recovery, and write to Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for more evidence. For sale by all leading druggists.

(that would dare to discount it.) The nation's notes would be of incalculably greater value—it was secured by the total wealth of the country, and no note could default in payment while there was any wealth left to tax. Foreign balances must be paid in the money of the credit country which we had to buy with any wealth we had to offer that cost us the least. If gold was demonetized it would release all the gold coin in circulation and make it available to pay foreign balances, without affecting our money circulation at all. Foreign money markets would have no influence on money circulation in the United States, but we could take advantage of every fluctuation in the value of gold. Mr. Bourne admitted he was not master of the money problem, and was very much interested in scientific money, and requested that copies of Mr. McClure's articles be sent to him, and promised that he would give it careful study and would favor Mr. McClure with his criticism if he found he was capable of doing so.

LABORITES NOT PROSECUTED DECLARE STATE POLICEMEN

SALEM, Mass., Oct. 22.—State Policeman Flynn was the principal witness today in the case against Joseph Eitor, Arturo Giovannitti and Antonio Caruso, the labor leaders charged with killing Anna Lopizko during the recent textile strike at Lawrence. HOME AND ENTIRE CONTENTS LOST

The home of Mrs. Frank Pool, 1206 West Ninth street was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning together with its contents.

Mrs. Pool and little daughter, who were occupying the house, had left the place for down town only a few minutes before the fire broke out. A fire alarm was turned in by neighbors but when the fire company arrived the whole inside of the two-story building was in flames as was also the roof. The inside of the building was ceiled with cedar lumber and being very dry it burned like a pitch torch. So quickly did the fire spread to every part of the house that there was no possible chance to remove any of the contents and they were all burned.

The fact that Mrs. Pool and her daughter were nowhere to be found in the neighborhood while the house was burning caused many to believe them to have been burned with the building. This apprehension was soon disproved by the firemen who made a thorough search of what was left of the burned building.

Mrs. Pool, when seen by a Mail Tribune representative, stated that she had no idea as to how the fire could have started unless from a defective flue. She had prepared the morning meal for herself and daughter as usual and after closing the stove draft had locked up the house and gone down town to look after some business matters, and knew nothing of the fire until the house was destroyed. Mrs. Pool was carrying $1000 insurance on the house and contents.
