

BRIGHTS DISEASE CLAIMS SHERMAN AS ITS VICTIM

UTICA, N. Y., Oct. 31.—James Schoolcraft Sherman, vice-president of the United States died last night at 9:42 p. m. of Bright's disease at his home in this city.

There was a slight relief shortly after 7 o'clock, caused by an apparent improvement in the condition of the kidneys, but it did not prove of lasting and at best gave only temporary hope.

At 9 o'clock the patient's temperature rose to 106, and from that time his condition rapidly passed from bad to worse until the end.

Sherman was unconscious when the end came and had been in that condition for several hours. All members of the immediate family witnessed the final scene. Besides Mrs. Sherman and her three sons and their wives, R. M. and Thomas Sherman, brothers, and Mrs. L. B. Moore and Mrs. H. J. Cookingham, sisters of Sherman, were at the bedside.

Soon after Sherman's death Dr. F. N. Peck, the attending physician, issued a statement which, after stating the facts concerning the death, concludes: "He died in an uraemic coma as a result of Bright's disease, heart disease and arterio-sclerosis."

James Schoolcraft Sherman was born in New Hartford, a suburb of Utica, October 24, 1855. His father, General Richard Updyke Sherman, was a lawyer of distinction and a democrat who had held several important offices.

Following his public school course, young Sherman entered Hamilton college, from which he graduated in 1888 as honor man. Then after a two years trip abroad he returned home and was admitted to the bar.

Like his father, Sherman became a democrat, and remained such until he was defeated for membership to the county committee by a bewhiskered farmer. He immediately switched and became an active worker for the party.

Upon reaching the age of 29, in 1884, Sherman was elected mayor of Utica by the republican party. Three years later he was married to Miss Carrie Babcock, daughter of Dr. Lewis H. Babcock, a prominent lawyer. He had three sons, two of whom are now married, Cherrill, 26, banker; Richard Updyke, 24, professor of mathematics at Hamilton college; and Thomas Moore, 22, secretary-treasurer of the Smythe-Despard company.

From the time of his election as mayor Sherman remained an active figure in political life. Elected to congress from the twenty-third district in 1887, he served until 1891, when he was defeated for re-election. Two years later he was elected from the twenty-fifth district and served until 1903. From that year he represented the twenty-seventh district. He was honored many times by his state, serving as chairman of various republican state conventions from 1895 until 1906. President McKinley once offered him a place on the board of general appraisers in New York, but he declined.

As a member of the "big five"—Cannon, Tawney, Dalzell, Payne and himself—Sherman distinctly made himself felt. For years this coterie decided the fate of bills in the house. He was a strong friend of Speaker Cannon and was bitterly opposed to Roosevelt. Sherman's most important work in congress was as head of the committee on Indian affairs. He was no speaker, but accomplished his work in the committee in the committee rooms. Through siding with the packers on one occasion Sherman earned the sobriquet of "Short-Weight Jim." Another nickname which he gained while chairman of the national congressional committee was "Dollar Jim."

During his political career Sherman carried on his law practice in a desultory fashion with his brother-in-law, H. J. Cookingham, of Utica, appearing only in very important cases. Although practically poor when first entering politics, Sherman left an estate estimated at $2,000,000. He was president of the Utica Trust & Deposit company, the New Hartford Canning company and was interested in various other thriving business ventures in Utica and elsewhere.

GREAT CROWD CHEERS TEDDY AT NEW YORK

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, New York, Oct. 31.—A crowd that jammed Madison Square garden from floor to roof and overflowed through three blocks of surrounding streets, greeted the leaders of the progressive party last night at a mass meeting, marking the first public appearance of Colonel Roosevelt since the attack made on him at Milwaukee, October 14.

Governor Johnson, vice-presidential candidate, and Oscar S. Straus, candidate for governor of New York, speaking the way for a great demonstration to the former president.

A sea of waving handkerchiefs and a great chorus of yells greeted the candidates as they appeared on the platform, and it was 8:20 o'clock before Senator Dixon, chairman of the national committee, could secure order to present Straus, the first speaker.

Straus said our country is blessed by having leaders peculiarly qualified to carry the nation through its storms. In the first and second periods of its existence Washington and Jefferson and Lincoln were leaders. Now in this third period Theodore Roosevelt has arisen as a leader in the struggle for social justice.

For two hours before the meeting, while the garden was filling, the crowd was entertained by moving pictures of Roosevelt's western tour. Cheering greeted every appearance of Roosevelt on the films, and when the candidates reached the platform the cheering reached such proportions it was necessary to resort to a band to enable Johnson and Straus to begin their speeches.

Colonel Roosevelt reached the hall at 9:15, while Governor Johnson was still speaking. His progress through the streets was greeted with cheers that penetrated the hall and brought answering cheers from inside. As he came up on the high platform through the rear stairway of the garden it became a bedlam of sound and a mass of waving color.

With a broad smile the colonel stepped forward and waved his hand in salute. The cheers grew in volume. Gestures for the crowd to be seated intensified the noise. Roosevelt insisted on standing in an effort to bring the crowd to order. The demonstration lasted forty-two minutes.

Then the colonel, after requesting the police to keep order in the hall, began speaking. Saying that we care for deeds and not for words and recognize no divine right to work injustice, the colonel declared that while the progressive party stands for the constitution, it does not consent to make it a fetish for the protection of fossilized wrong.

He declared for an upright judiciary, but did deny to judges the right to make laws and where they attempt to right ourselves finally recall the decision. There were no personalities or polemics, and very little politics in his speech.

The tariff and regulation of the trusts was not touched. The burden of his message was that the country faces a crisis brought on by "the brutal selfishness of arrogance and the brutal selfishness of our enemies," in which it was a duty of all conscientious citizens to stand for liberty and human rights.

Captain Wall stated that he would not rearrest McComas, as he was satisfied that Mrs. McComas had committed suicide, and that her husband was the victim of circumstances which had placed him in a false position.

Drs. Terry and Moffitt, who attended Mrs. McComas, stated that examination of the wound had convinced them that it was a plain case of suicide.

EDDIE ON STAND DENIES HIS GUILT

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 31.—Former City Prosecutor Gay Eddie took the stand in his own defense today in the juvenile department of the superior court. The former official denied in detail all the charges made by Mrs. Alma Jones, a negro, who testified that Eddie had misconducted himself in his relations with her. Eddie declared that during the whole time Mrs. Jones was in his office the door between the general office and his private room was open.

Under cross examination by Deputy District Attorney McCartney, Eddie admitted asking Mrs. Jones to leave town as her husband might become jealous. When asked why, after this occurrence, he had employed the woman as a detective, the defendant said he wanted to give her something to do for a few days.

Eddie was still under cross examination when court adjourned at noon.

Why Salves Can't Cure Eczema

Since the old-fashioned theory of curing eczema through the blood has been given up by scientists, many different salves have been tried for skin diseases. But it has been found that these salves only clog the pores and cannot penetrate to the inner skin below the epidermis where the eczema germs are lodged.

This--the quality of penetrating--probably explains the tremendous success of the well known liquid eczema remedy, oil of wintergreen, thymol, glycerine, etc., as compounded in D.D.D. Prescription.

We have sold other remedies for skin troubles but none that we can recommend as highly as this for we know that D.D.D. stops the itch at once. We just want you to give D.O.D. a trial. That will be enough to prove it. Of course, all other druggists have D.D.D. Prescription--go to them if you can't come to us--but don't accept some big profit substitute. But if you come to our store, we are so certain of what D.D.D. will do for you that we offer you a full size bottle of this guarantee--if you do not find that it takes away the itch AT ONCE, it costs you not a cent.
