WAR SHATTERS BEAUTIFUL CITY BUILT BY DIAZ

(Continued from page 1.) stricken crowds scattered everywhere—the women shrieked and falling, fainting, to be trampled on by the fleeing thousands. Into the horde of refugees swept riderless cavalry horses, their hoofs beating down men and women and trampling those who already had fallen. I could see dozens of the refugees fall from the bullets of the machine guns which soldiers from the palace trained directly on the crowd until the streets were swept clear of all but the dead and wounded. Two hundred and eighty bodies were removed from the streets around the Zocalo as the result of the first massacre and fully 800 non-combatants were seriously wounded. Slaughter by Diaz After the first slaughter Diaz led his cavalry and artillery on the gallop to Cuicadela and the arsenal which were captured after a sharp battle. Diaz then arranged to withstand a protracted siege, assisted by General Mondragon, the most expert artilleryman in the Mexican army. The government was caught unprepared and could not immediately assault the rebel position. Madero spent all Monday in sending troops and placing batteries advantageously in the streets leading to the arsenal. Early on Tuesday the artillery duel began in earnest with six federal batteries concentrating their fire on the Diaz fortifications. Diaz captured with the arsenal an enormous supply of shrapnel which he poured on the federals in the surrounding buildings with disastrous effect. Capital a Battlefield Then war's real horrors were brought home to the citizens. A scene unheard of in modern warfare then began to unfold itself before the terror-stricken gaze of 500,000 people. The capital became a great battlefield ground for crowded thousands of women and children, none of whom had been warned or given the slightest chance to escape. Practically every one in the city was exposed to the chance of death and wounds, even when in their own homes. Scores of non-combatants were killed in similar circumstances by bullets, flying far and wide from shrapnel shells bursting in every part of the city. These exploded over the most populated sections of the city, scattering the deadly hail of leaden missiles. Others crashed into the walls of high buildings, entered the windows of clubs, hotels, banks and stores, wrecking buildings by the dozen, and killing and wounding hundreds of innocent persons. Day after day and often at night the same frightful conditions prevailed. Added to the thunder of the siege guns, came the almost incessant rattle of the quickfiring and the whining song of bullets. On many streets the bodies of dead and wounded lay throughout the day. These were removed only when darkness brought partial protection to the rescuers. Until Sunday morning at 2 o'clock when a supposed 20-hour armistice was declared, the stricken city knew hardly a moment's peace. Cessation on Sunday On Sunday the people ventured timidly outdoors, hardly believing the news of the temporary cessation of hostilities. As the morning bells passed the sound of church bells, which had been drowned by the bombardment for days, were again heard and again the people flocked into the streets. The city took on a new life and the people, quickly forgetting and ever ready for a fiesta, assumed a holiday spirit. They promenade the streets, gathered in the actual zone of the week's fighting and watched the preparations of the soldiers to resume their warfare. Suddenly and without warning, a rattle of small arms and the shrieks of bursting shells broke the stillness. Caught unawares by the action of Madero's forces in breaking the armistice, hundreds of non-combatants were shot down in flight. Madero's soldiers had taken advantage of the armistice to improve their positions. They fired upon Diaz's soldiers on the pretext that the rebels had broken faith. The battle waged fiercely all day and far into the night and was resumed Monday and again Tuesday. News of Huerta's Coup On Tuesday came the fearful tidings that the federals were preparing to use mortars to hurl dynamite shells at the Citadel. A tortured populace stood trembling, expecting complete ruin of the city, when word came to a sudden and significant change in the situation. Generals Huerta and Blanquet, federal commanders had arrested President Madero and Gustavo Madero. Then the battle ended. Soon the streets were filled with

DEADLOCK SAVES ENGINEER'S SALARY TO CITY TAXPAYERS

That the deadlock between the mayor and council over city employees is productive of some good to the taxpayers is evidenced by the fact that taxpayers are now saving the salary of a city engineer, for there is no city engineer at present. Olin Arnsperger who was suspended Wednesday for the second time by the mayor has turned in the keys of his office pending developments. He stated today that he would, as an individual, work with any commission or citizen in giving any data they may require in connection with improvements until such time as he was either reinstated or his successor took office. As the council refuses to confirm other appointments the office remains vacant. That the influence of City Attorney Boggs is great enough with Mayor Eifer to offset any promises made by that official, is indicated by the appointment of H. G. Stoekmann as city engineer, which appointment was not confirmed by the city council. Stoekmann was appointed in preference to W. T. Beveridge, who was a hard worker during the campaign for Eifer, contributing in a great degree to Eifer's election, and who was promised by the candidate, now mayor, the appointment of city engineer. Engineer Beveridge was an applicant for the position previous to Eifer's election and was promised by the mayor that "he would be taken care of" and his friends are consequently greatly disappointed.

to the police were obtained today by District Attorney Whitman. Twenty saloon and hotelkeepers were questioned and one negro, Leroy Wilkins, appeared later before the grand jury to testify that he paid from $60 to $100 per month to the police for protection. Evidence which the district attorney has been gathering from the saloonkeepers will be laid before the grand jury tomorrow. It will show, according to the district attorney, that more than 300 saloons and hotels, many of which violated no laws, paid regularly to secure freedom from police interference. It is estimated by Whitman that a quarter of a million per year was paid from one inspection district.
