A Word of Explanation.

My attention has been called to a letter written by the district attorney, by order of the county court, to owners of fruit trees in the city of Medford, asking them to settle spraying accounts. These accounts should have been collected by Messrs. Powell and Watson who did the spraying, and should not have been turned into the county court until the owners of the sprayed trees refused to pay the bills.

I have nothing to do with collections, and payment should be made to the parties doing the work. If, as it happens, the parties who did the spraying made no effort to collect, and simply sent the bills to the county court, a mistake has been made. Certainly, the people for whom the spraying was done should be given a chance to pay the spraying bills before a lien is placed upon the property, or any other action taken, however, the county court and district attorney are not to blame as the matter was not properly placed before them by those who did the spraying.

P. J. O'GARA, Pathologist in Charge.

MAUDE ADAMS IN PETER PAN AT PAGE THEATER

The five acts of the play boast of elaborate settings, the most picturesque of them being the last scene of all showing Peter in his little house hanging in the tree tops. The company surrounding the actress is made up of prominent players. That a welcome awaits Miss Adams in the doublet and hose of the boy who wanted always to remain young and have fun goes without the saying.

Maude Adams is coming to the city and will be seen at the Page Theater when she will appear in J. M. Barrie's fairy play, "Peter Pan." This is news that will cause pleasure in many circles for the combination of the actress and of the play is one that makes for entertainment of the delightful sort. There is little to be said of Barrie's whimsical drama of the child heart at this late day. Someone has described it as a dream in which are realized the darling fancies of childhood. Barrie's play is the expression of the belief in the gladness of youth.
