RECONCILIATION MARRIAGE

to be a "family affair" and not a matter of state, there was not near so large a number. At the central table sat the bride couple with the czar, King George, the Emperor, Queen of England, Empress and others of the royal guests. After removal of the soup plates, the Kaiser arose and proposed a toast to the young couple. Toasts also were drunk to King George and the czar. Bride's Garters Given.

After the dinner the entire bridal party returned to the marble hall, where a "torch dance" began. For torches there were twelve long wax candles, held by as many pages, who led the dance, in which the young couple also engaged.

Shortly after 9:30 tonight, came the final ceremony—which brought the wedding festivities to an end—that of dividing and distributing the bride's "garters." At the conclusion of the torch dance, the young couple made their salutations to the guests and, led by twelve pages with lighted candles, were conducted to the bridal chamber in the palace. The princess' crown and jewels were here delivered to the keeper of the crown jewels, while the high mistress of the court carried out the traditional custom of distributing parts of the bride's garters.

This now is merely a symbol of the custom in the old days when the bride's garters were actually cut into small pieces and given as souvenirs to the wedding guests. In place of the "garters," the mistress of the court distributed as souvenirs to a small number of the guests, little silk ribbons with the name of the bride on them in silver.

Accompanied by the emperor, the princess, several of her brothers, the Duchess of Brunswick and Luneberg, her husband, were escorted to the Stettiner railway station, where a special train was awaiting them to take the couple to Hubertusstock hunting lodge, where they will spend their honeymoon.

Reconciliation Marriage.

The "great reconciliation marriage" as the Germans called the wedding, bridges a political gulf fifty years wide and ends happily a long standing family feud between the Guelphs and the reigning Hohenzollerns. Prince Ernest is heir to the crown of Hanover, which the Hohenzollerns took away from his grandfather in 1866. In place of the crown the Guelphs have always sworn they would some time get back, the Kaiser today gave the would-be-king of Hanover his only daughter. By the arrangement Prince Ernest gives up his claims to the old Hanoverian kingdom, the Kaiser assures himself of freedom from attack from that quarter, by attaching the claimant to his own family, and his daughter marries a prince who is heir to $25,000,000.

DEMOCRATS MAY SPLIT OVER FREE WOOL AND SUGAR

WASHINGTON, May 24.—The wool and sugar stumbling blocks of the tariff held the attention of the senate finance sub-committee and senators in general today, the legislative air being filled with rumors of the contemplated changes and the alliances and counter alliances of further tightening of the administration forces for free wool and for free sugar in three years.

Great interest was attached to the statement made by Senator Walsh condemning the proposition to put wool and sugar on the free list which gave rise to the report that he might join with Senators Ransdell and Thurston and vote against the bill.

In that case the senate's democratic majority being only six would be a tie necessitating the vote of Vice President Marshall to pass it. Should this develop there are some democrats who believe Senator Poinsett, the only avowed progressive in the senate will vote with them on the bill.

This would give leeway for another democrat to desert in the final vote. Administration leaders declared today that the situation looked very favorable for the bill, but they look forward to an interesting session in the party caucus when the southern and western senators will have an opportunity to make a determined struggle against free wool and free sugar.
