SCENIC DETAILS FOR JOHN MASON MOST COMPLETE

When John Mason appears at the Page, July 23, in the celebrated Augustus Thomas play, "As a Man Thinks," every big and little bit of scenic detail used in the metropolitan production will be intact. The press agent tells us all this journey to us in four huge railway cars. The sincerity with which it is assured us that there is no number two "As a Man Thinks" company is one of the most alluring and enticing features of the publicity department of the new offering. Among Mr. Mason's associate players are these favorites: Julie Herne, daughter of the great author-actor, James A. Herne; John Flood, George Gaston, Grace Reals, Jean Salisbury and Jane Stuart, Willis Martin and Frank Stitworth. The character of Dr. Seelig in "As a Man Thinks," like Jack Brookfield in Mr. Thomas' other John Mason play, "The Witching Hour," was especially written for Mr. Mason, and the New York reviewers to a man declare it the best bit of character work the noted star has ever interpreted.

Notice. To members of Crysanthemum Circle, No. 84, W. of W.: You are requested to pay your dues not later than Monday, July 22nd, as I leave for Portland on the 29th. KATHERINE WAITE, Clerk of W. of W.
