SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 29.—Maury I. Diggs and Marsha Warrington, the dominant couple in the Reno escapade and what had gone before, are today taking the spotlight from F. Drew Caminetti in his own trial.

When the Warrington girl resumed her testimony where she had left off Thursday, it was Diggs, Diggs, Diggs. It was as though he again were on trial.

Caminetti figures in the testimony largely because what was said and done had been in his presence. That made a great part of the evidence relevant.

Thursday it had been the same way. It was the husks of the liaison between Diggs and his alluring companion which held the interest. The most dramatic incident of the day came as a sequel to the court session. It was when Diggs made a desperate effort to compel Miss Warrington to meet his gaze after she had left the stand. For ten minutes, with twenty people looking on, the man and the woman fought out their silent battle in the federal court room.

The girl won. But not until her sister, sensing some vague danger, had interposed herself between Marsha and Diggs, who had approached within a few feet. Miss Warrington's relatives also formed a barrier about the girl. Her stubborn resistance, the fight to keep her eyes from his, seemed to indicate that surrender would have been a shameful thing, a submission to the old baneful dominance.

The effort left Diggs flushed and breathing hard. He had turned his back upon his wife, ignoring her attempts to distract his attention. He did not accompany Mrs. Diggs from the courtroom, but lingered until the Warrington girl had slipped out by another door, closely surrounded by relatives and friends. Then he mopped his brow.

"The fellow was trying to hypnotize that girl." The observation came from a hard-headed business man. Others repeated it with conviction. They spoke as though they had witnessed something indecent.

This incident put a humiliating climax on a gruelling day for Mrs. Lina Diggs. For the first time she had mustered up sufficient courage to hear the story of her husband's misdeeds from the lips of the woman he had preferred over her. From time time Miss Warrington assumed the stand her eyes never wavered from the witness. A frown and an occasional twitch of the lips told of the torture she was enduring as the Warrington girl revealed the successive intimacies culminating in the Reno bungalow.

W. J. Sullivan, Sacramento probation officer, testified that no complaints against the four principals in the case had been made to him.

"Were any complaints made against Diggs?" asked Roche. "Only for taking young girls to the Diapenbrook theater," replied Sullivan.

"Any intimation that Diggs and Caminetti were intimate with Miss Warrington and Lola Norris?"

"No," was the answer. The prosecution was not allowed to go further into details regarding other young women.

"Caminetti," interjected the court, "is not to be tried for any other acts except those contained in this charge."

Marsha Warrington then resumed her story at 10:40 o'clock. The jurymen watched the girl closely, leaning forward to catch her words. The plans for the elopement entered into by the four, was first taken up.

Mrs. Elizabeth Caminetti, wife of the defendant, was not in court on Thursday. It left a growing impression that perhaps she had decided not to take the stand in behalf of her husband and to repudiate, as has Caminetti, statements that there had been a reconciliation.

The defendant's mother, Mrs. Anthony Caminetti, also was absent. She has not appeared at the trial of her son for the past two days—ever since the testimony began. This oc-

LOGGING ROAD LOOMS AS LINK IN COAST LINE

(Rogue River Courier.)

From Myrtle Point comes the report that a Southern Pacific survey crew has taken the field there and that considerable significance attaches to its operations. A dispatch from Myrtle Point dated the 26th inst., read as follows:

"A Southern Pacific surveying party has been started south from the terminal of the Smith-Powers logging road, which is being constructed out of here, and rumor has it that the line will be made a link either in the Southern Pacific coast road or a new line to the present Southern Pacific road near Grants Pass.

"The Smith-Powers logging road will be about 23 miles long and of standard railroad construction as to grades and curves, and is being laid with 90-pound steel. Some time ago the Southern Pacific closed a contract whereby the road is to operate the line with the exception of the logging train business."

37 TOLLERS KILLED IN OREGON IN JULY

SALEM, Ore., Aug. 29.—Five killed and thirty-seven injured during the month of July in this state, according to a report issued by Labor Commissioner Hoff. One man was killed while engaged in railroad construction. Three were killed by railway trains and one was killed in a sawmill.

caused much speculation and seemed to substantiate hints that family antagonisms have intruded. Thursday's testimony up to the time Miss Warrington took the stand did not bring out any sensational new evidence. It was merely a repetition of what had already been adduced during the Diggs trial.
