AMERICAN BAR HEARS HALDANE; URGES UNITY

MONTREAL, Canada, Sept. 1.—Pleading eloquently for a closer relationship between England and the United States, the Right Honorable Viscount Richard Burdon Haldane, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, today spoke as the guest of honor of the American Bar association, which is holding its annual convention here today. Lord Haldane took for his topic "Higher Nationality; a Study in Law and Ethics."

"What one who finds himself face to face with this assemblage naturally thinks of is the future of these three nations; a future that may depend largely on the influence of men with opportunities such as are ours," declared his lordship.

"The United States and Canada and Great Britain together form a group which is unique; unique because of its common inheritance in traditions, in surroundings and in ideals. And nowhere is the character of this common inheritance more apparent than in the region of jurisprudence. The lawyers of the countries think for the most part alike. At no period has political divergence prevented this fact from being strikingly apparent. Where the letter of their law is different, the spirit is yet the same.

"It is this identity of spirit, largely due to a past, which the lawyers of this group have inherited jointly, that not only forms a bond of union, but furnishes them with an influence that can hardly be reproduced in other nations.
