NICK JERRY MAKES SAN FRANCISCO FLASH

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 5.—For 55 years N. Jerry of Medford, Ore., wandered through the Sierra Nevada and Rocky mountains with pick and shovel digging gold. He promised himself that when he collected $10,000 worth he would settle down.

This morning he walked into the St. Francis hotel carrying a square canvas box. He looked like the original gold man. There were 14 gold teeth in his mouth, a two ounce nugget on his massive watch chain and a three ounce nugget in his buttonhole. He wore as many rings as a sultan of Sulu.

"I have $10,000 worth of gold dust in that box, and I want to see Mr. Jackling, the copper king," he told the clerk. The clerk thought that anybody with $10,000 in real money was worth notice.

Millionaire Jackling was not in, however, so they sent for his secretary, H. B. Tooker.

"Can you buy $10,000 worth of pure gold?" asked Jerry, who seemed to resent the curious glances cast his way.

"Not today," responded Mr. Tooker. "We have a case full of fine specimens. Good day."

"I'm 78 years old, but I can lick any young fellow that wears a white collar," said Mr. Jerry, as he left the hotel.

Regarding the future enforcement of the Mann white slave act, Caminetti said: "The department will enforce with all diligence this act as it touches the duty of the department. If statements have been issued to the contrary they are without my authority. If anything we shall more strictly attend to this part of the duties of the department."

Relative to the statements made in Seattle to the effect that only international cases would be given attention Caminetti said he had not authorized any statement indicating a change in the department's policy.
