MILITIA ARMS AT ARMORY STOLEN IN TROOPS ABSENCE

WOODLAND, Cal., Mar. 12.—The local National Guard armory was broken into some time last night and a quantity of arms and ammunition stolen. Just how great the damage was and the actual losses will not be known until the quarter master checks up the property on his return from Sacramento, where Company F is being held in readiness for any trouble occasioned by the unemployed situation.

Constable W. R. Barker was first notified of the burglary and upon investigating found that the front door of the building had been broken into and the interior generally ransacked.

Everything of value that could be carried away was taken, but the chief loot seemed to be 12 Springfield rifles and ammunition.

The local officials, while attributing the burglary to unemployed marauders, don't attach any significance with main army of unemployed camped on the banks of the Sacramento river at Broderick, also in this county.

It would be impossible for the men who broke into the local armory to reach the main army of unemployed camped opposite Sacramento because the roads are overflowed with water and the railroad trestles are being guarded.

RADIUM

WITH all of our knowledge and learning, we know but very little of the world about us. Every day some new fact is ascertained that smashes the theories of centuries and starts scientists to constructing anew the hypothesis of the things that are.

Even with the multitude of artificial aids, human powers are so limited that but a tithe is seen or comprehended. The why and the wherefore of the simplest phenomena are still unsolved mysteries. The pursuit of knowledge is the most fascinating of occupations, and as yet a bare beginning has been made.

Recently the papers have been full of the use of radium for various purposes. A congressman cheerfully gave his life to test its value as a cancer cure. It is said to kill some germs and to stimulate other germs. It almost seems to create life as well as to destroy it. It seems to discharge electricity as well as spontaneously charge itself with electricity, and make the air a conductor of electricity. Altogether, radium seems quite the most remarkable substance yet discovered.

We read of glass, porcelain and paper turned from white to violet tinge by exposure to radium, of white phosphorus similarly turned to yellow, and of countless curious, mystifying chemical changes. Radium seems to effect everything surrounding it. It produces paralysis and death in animals, including humans. Exposure to it destroys eyesight, burns the skin and brings agonized death.

Radium retards the growth of certain forms of life, such as larvae, so that they never mature, while other forms become monstrosities from its influence. It causes the hair to fall out of some creatures, like mice, and to grow on others, like rabbits. Its effects are various and puzzling in the extreme.

Radium gives off a constant light, due largely to stimulation of impurities by the powerful but invisible rays. It has a temperature of about 5 degrees Fahrenheit and melts ice. It imparts radio activity to metals and to every substance adjacent to it, and may prove that the alchemists of old were correct in their transmutation theory, for helium, the gas most present in the sun's atmosphere, is also present in the gaseous emanation from radium.

What is this wonderful, mystifying radium? It is an element, discovered in 1898 by Professor Pierre Curie and Mme. Curie at Paris. It resembles common table salt in appearance. It is a metal, though never prepared in metallic form. It gives off three distinct types of rays, named after the first three letters of the Greek alphabet, Alpha, Beta and Gamma. Alpha rays constitute 99 per cent of all the rays and consist of positively electrified particles. The Beta rays consist of negatively charged particles, approximately one two-thousandth the size of those constituting the Alpha rays. The Gamma rays are few in number and resemble the X-rays produced at the moment of the expulsion of the Beta rays. They are not influenced by magnetism and possess remarkable penetrative powers.

The federal government has reserved the radium lands of Colorado and will manufacture the element, which is found in pitch blend and other radio active substances in smaller percentage than the percentage of gold in sea water. It takes 2500 tons of uranium residues (pitchblend) after the uranium has been extracted to make a pound of radium. It takes one month to work the process and costs $2000 a ton.

Such is a brief account of this little known substance, which is attracting so much attention and which is destined to attract so much more before its remarkable chemical, physiological, luminous, thermal, electrical and other effects are understood. And radium is probably but one of myriad unknown substances about us.

Beautifying the Pacific Highway

Among the most important events of next week which will attract the attention of the public in and about Medford is the lecture to be delivered by Samuel Hill, the foremost good roads advocate in the world, at the Page theater on Monday afternoon, under the auspices of the Greater Medford club. Especially should the women of our locality turn out en masse to greet Mr. Hill and to listen to his splendid and instructive address on the beautifying of the Pacific highway. The members of the Greater Medford club feel that they are all engaged together with the women of Medford, whether members of the club or not, in this great enterprise, and that they can, in connection with the state highway commission, make the Oregon state highway one of, if not the most beautiful in the world. The women of Georgia parked the roadways in each direction from their respective towns and planted trees of rapid growth adapted to the soil and climate. Let us make the approach to Medford fitting and worthy of so beautiful a town. It is conceded that a good percentage of the visitors at the 1915 exposition will make trips by automobile through the country, and we want him to plan their route via Medford, not only because it is the gateway to Crater Lake, but also because they can travel with comfort and pleasure over a stretch of the most splendidly improved and scenic highway in the world, with Medford as their objective point for recreation and to enjoy our climate and the comforts and luxuries which we can offer. Of course, we cannot have shade trees by the time of the exposition, but we can see that the standing timber along the road is preserved and that shrubbery is planted, and that our splendid Hugh Dixon rose is in evidence in profusion, near the entrance to our city, and perhaps we can help things along so that it will be possible that drinking fountain of the sparkling mineral water from the Siskiyou can be installed.

Among these travelers from the exposition will be those who do not contemplate a change in the locality of their residence; others there will be who will be on the lookout for a place to start a new home. These, we know, will need but little urging to stay and dwell with us in this beautiful Rogue River valley, and the former we want because we know that they must enter with enthusiasm and leave with regret, and that they will tell others who are looking for a place to settle, and that these will come and see and be conquered.

Kipling as Hindoo Sees Him

What a pity that Kipling does not describe more scenes that he has witnessed. He could have described scenes of Indian life that continually passed under his notice. He might have entered the massive palaces of pompous rajahs and the humble home of the poverty-stricken peasant and told us in his wonderful language what he saw there. Kipling had such great opportunities.

For instance, take the story of Kim. The character of Kim has been treated in a similar way to that of Hamlet. According to Mr. Lord, the editor of a Darjeeling newspaper, the Pall Mall, Kim is no other than Tim Doolan, Jr. Shortly after the so-called Indian mutiny of 1857 a company of British soldiers were garrisoned on the dreary, sunless heights of Seneshall, a peak of the Himalayas, not far from Darjeeling. There the sun shines on an average of three days a year, and there a romantic Irish sergeant fell in love with a beautiful Tibetan girl. The sergeant's name was Tim Doolan. He eloped with the Tibetan beauty and crossed the frontier to live with her people on the borderland. Nothing more was heard of Sergeant Doolan for another twenty years, when his son, Tim Doolan, Jr., was arrested in the market place in Darjeeling for murder. Young Doolan was very fair in complexion, with the Irish blue eyes and red hair, although he spoke only Tibetan. The British authorities looked him over suspiciously and wondered at the Irish type and Irish name. Later, papers belonging to Tim Doolan, the sergeant, establishing the origin and identity of the son, were found on the accused, who, like Kim, valued the papers as a charm. The sergeant's rifle and side arms were also found afterward in Doolan's hut. The half-caste son was executed for murder. The story is well known all over India, and from such frail material Kipling created Kim.

But Kipling is not an authority on India or things Indian. He is only a writer of the life of foreigners in India—not of human life.—A. R. Sarath-Roy in North American Review.

LADIES! SECRET TO DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Bring back color, gloss and thickness with Grandma's recipe of Sage and Sulphur.

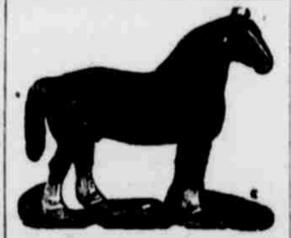

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant; remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of fuss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.
