Desecrating a Great People's Holiday and Ancestry

By Father J. M. O'Neill

St. Patrick's day is with us once again with all the inspiring memories associated with it in the minds of millions, in this and every other country, the world over. It is a day that should be held in honor, not only by Irishmen and Irish women, and their children, but also by all persons, whatever their race or nationality, who are capable of appreciating high achievements, that have contributed to the advance of Christian civilization, not only in Ireland, but in many other lands.

The effects of the great work of Ireland's apostle did not cease with his passing away, but continued down through the centuries, and are today a potent factor in the world's affairs. When civilization in Europe centuries ago was crushed by the eruption of the barbarian hordes, ancient Ireland became the schoolhouse of Europe, and the mighty warriors of the prince of peace, who in olden days saved Europe, were the sons of St. Patrick.

In this land that has welcomed and sheltered them, and whose greatness is largely of their making, it is estimated that there are twenty millions in whose veins flow Irish blood. At least seven of America's presidents had Irish blood in their veins—Jackson, Buchanan, Arthur, Polk, Monroe, McKinley and Roosevelt. There were a few Irish on the "Mayflower," and twenty years later 500 or more were transported. In the days of Cromwell, when $50 was the sum paid for the head of a patriotic Irishman, more than 100,000 were driven out, and most came to the American colonies. They were on the firing line, the readiest of the ready, in the war for Independence. "You lost America by the Irish," declared Lord Mountjoy in the British parliament. The first blow, four months before Lexington, was struck by John Sullivan; the first British warship was captured by an O'Brien, and the first official father of the American navy was John Barry. The first American general to fall on a field of battle was Montgomery, an Irishman. Of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, three were of Irish birth, and five others of Irish blood.

In the civil war there is Frederick'sburg, where "Meagher with his Irish lay before St. Mary's heights"; Sheridan's matchless ride down the Shenandoah valley, Sherman's resistless march from Atlanta to the sea; the Wilderness, Gettysburg, Antietam and Appomattox tell the tale of bravery and daring.

On general principles, then, it would seem impossible that any man or set of men would be so incapable of appreciating nobility of character as to seek to cover with ridicule the memory of such noble dead, and of the apostle that fired them and theirs with qualities that ennoble human nature. Yet such is the case. Year after year, on the recurrence of St. Patrick's day, filthy caricatures are printed and circulated to make the day and those that honor it a subject of laughter, for those who have as much conception of what it means as a Hottentot. Thoughtless storekeepers display caricatures to attract attention and obtain patronage! No wonder the Irish-American league of Oakland should particularize them after this fashion: "We refer to the insult that year after year is flung in the face of the Irish people of this community, by persistently associating the pig with the Irish character, and all things Irish, in their shop displays of novelties for St. Patrick's day. These insolent displays not only directly insult the Irish, but shock the feelings of all refined persons. We therefore believe it to be the duty of every organization of Irish-Americans, of every Irish home and of every individual of Irish birth or blood, not only in this community, but on the entire Pacific coast, to join in this movement."

Great Salt Lake Waters Found to Preserve Timbers

In replacing a railroad trestle recently burned along the north shore of Great Salt Lake, engineers have just found that the piles are still perfectly sound after forty-three years of service. Looking for the cause, since these were only of local pine and fir, they found the timbers were impregnated throughout with salt from the lake.

At another point on the lake, eighteen-inch piles set twenty-nine years, are similarly preserved with salt which has penetrated to their very center. Timbers in the Southern Pacific trestles across Salt Lake, placed in 1902, appear to be as good as on the day when the piles were driven. They have been preserved well above water line by the salt dished on to them by the waves, a fact apparently anticipated by the engineers who built the trestles.

The first transcontinental telegraph line, built before the railroad, extended west from Salt Lake City through the prosperous mining camps of Eureka, Austin and Virginia City. When the railroad was built, the telegraph line was transferred to follow its right of way and the old poles sawed off at the ground. An engineer who recently examined the butts left in the ground in the salt desert near Fish Springs found that, although fifty years had passed since the poles were cut off, the old butts were perfectly sound.

Telephone and electric companies in the Salt Lake valley have used the local salt for preserving poles. When set up, about seventy-five pounds of salt is placed around the pole on the ground. This method cannot be used, however, when the pole is on or near a lawn, or in any place where vegetation is desired.

It is pointed out that the reason why the waters of Salt Lake act as a strong preservative, as distinguished from ocean waters, is because the lake water is so much saltier, being practically a saturated solution. Preservation with salt is of no use in ocean piling against the attack of teredos and other marine borers.

Experts in the forest service who have been investigating the preservative treatment of timber offer the suggestion that ties and poles which have been immersed for some time in the waters of the lake ought to be impervious to decay if the salt is not leached out by the action of the elements. It has been suggested that this can be guarded against, for example, by painting the butt of the pole with a coat of creosote which will keep out the moisture and keep in the salt.

The Truth About "The Poisoned Needle" From Medical View

Popular beliefs on scientific subjects apparently run in waves. Many will remember the interest in hypnotism which followed the publication of "Trilby." Svengali with his "hypnotic eye" at once became a real and possible personage in the public imagination. The newspapers were full of stories of girls and women who had suddenly been fixed and paralyzed by the hypnotic gaze of some mysterious stranger with piercing black eyes and who had been compelled by his will to fantastic acts which they were powerless to prevent. Fiction writers took up the idea, and stories centering around hypnotic influence became common. It was used as a plea in criminal cases, various culprits alleging that they had been hypnotized and compelled against their will to perform unlawful acts. All this occurred in spite of the fact, frequently stated and known by every scientific man, that the limitations of hypnotism are definite and well recognized, that no person can be hypnotized unknowingly or against his will, and that few persons are so susceptible to be capable of being compelled to perform acts beyond their own volition and knowledge.

Another popular fiction which in- ter took the place of hypnotism was that of instantaneous anesthesia. Stories appeared in the newspapers of women who had been necosted by strangers and, under some pretext, had permitted a cloth or a handkerchief to be pressed momentarily over their mouth and nose. Immediate unconsciousness was said to have followed, resulting in a period of insensibility and irresponsibility, varying from a few minutes to hours or even days. Chloroform sprayed into an open window by means of an atomizer, anesthetics tied to a rag on the end of a pole and thrown into a bedroom, instant unconsciousness following the administration of drugs unknown to physicians and pharmacists, were some of the variations of this idea. In the minds of physicians and nurses who see every day the administration of anesthetics, such stories only excite mirth. Any one who knows the difficulty and labor of securing unconsciousness through the use of anesthetics, even under the most favorable conditions and with every possible means of restraining and controlling the patient, knows how absurd such stories are.

A latter-day variation of these popular beliefs, says the Journal of the American Medical Association, may be found in the "poisoned needle" stories which have been going the rounds of the press recently. A woman goes to a moving picture theater, enters a crowded elevator, a street car or elevated train, or is caught in the press of a crowd. Suddenly she sees, close beside her, our old friend, the "mysterious stranger," with the piercing black eyes and the compelling manner. At the same time she feels a sting and knows that she has been stabbed with a poisoned needle. She immediately becomes unconscious, dazed or irresponsible for a greater or less period of time, during which she experiences a number of marvelous adventures or hair-breadth escapes.

It is not possible to say that no woman was ever without her knowledge given a drug hypodermically which produced unconsciousness. It can, however, be said very positively that there is no drug known to scientific men which could be administered in the manner or which would produce the effect described in recent newspaper reports.

One of the laws of hysteria is that when any peculiar phenomenon is reported, similar instances immediately appear throughout the country. We may now expect a spring crop of magazine stories and popular novels based on the poisoned needle as a motive. Scientifically, the thing is as ridiculous and impossible as hypnosis or an unwilling subject or anesthesia. Popular beliefs travel in waves, and hysteric and excited imaginations help them along. The history of popular delusions, from Salem witchcraft to present-day vagaries, is full of such instances.
