EDITOR INSPECTS PACIFIC HIGHWAY PAVING WORK

(From the Rogue River Argus)

We started out on the road home, the Pacific highway, if you please. A few hundred feet from the end of the Medford city pavement we came upon the first crew of men working on the road. These men were digging up the old macadam. We done some looking before we asked any questions, and in looking we discovered that a long stretch of road had not been dug up. We asked the foreman why and he stated that it was a low place and that the highest knobs were below grade and a little filling was needed. And say, it is a caution the stories that are being told about that road. "Of Dago labor," when in fact the nearest to a foreigner we saw was John Peterson and he owns an 80 up Evans creek and a home in Medford. Then "they're wasting time and money digging up what the county spent good money to put down." That's true, in part. This crew is going along with pick and shovel cutting down all knobs and ridges and filling up the low places and the surplus will all be used again within a few rods of where it was dug out. And as a matter of fact it would cost about twice as much to build the road if it was not leveled up ahead of the machine.

Reasons for Slant

From here we road along until we met F. A. Kittredge, resident engineer who is attending to the engineering part of the work. He told us of an experience he had been having with some farmers, "why they couldn't drive on the road darn thing with a load of hay without upsetting." Well there are some slant to the curves, especially on the square corners. And even these are no comparison to most any place on the old roadbed for two loads of hay to pass. But why the slant, why not level around the corner? Well four letters gives the answer, "fool," and the slant is not to save his neck, oh no, but the innocent victim he has with him. A number of machines have gone into the fence on this piece of road because the "fool" was driving so fast he could not make the turn.

When we asked Engineer Kittredge if he thought that a crew would be started on this end of county he said not if the Ashland scrap can be settled. So far all over the United States when road work was on it was a patch here and a patch there and a road nowhere, so in this case it is intent to complete the road from the California line as far north as the money on hand will permit.

Width of Road Bed

As to the width of the paved road bed it is 16 feet, never an inch less, but on the curves it runs up to 24 feet according to the sharpness of the curve, thus far but one curve has reached the 24 foot mark. On either side of the paved bed will be a road bed of dirt eight feet wide making the completed road 32 feet, except for a short distance where the drainage ditch is quite deep.

Over the mountains the paved bed will be eight feet, with eight feet dirt bed on either side, thus making the complete road 24 feet, except on some very sharp curves where the bed will be widened out to a point of safety.

As we went along we came to the concrete mixer. This is a little out of the ordinary. The engineer sits in his little room among his levers, he pulls one and the machine backs up a few feet, another lever and the coarse concrete comes forth and men spread it out and another lever and the surfacing comes forth. No wheelbarrows, no long distances, the men stand beside the machine and shovel, as everything is within reach. The haul is done by a big road engine which hauls a car load at a trip.

Paving 350 Feet a Day

The mixer and its crew of men complete 350 feet of paving a day. That is not the average to date, but it has been done, like a heavy freight, it does not go a mile a minute as soon as ordered but it takes time to get it in motion.

On leaving the mixer behind we proceeded to ride over the new road. And it was no fun at all. It is covered with about two inches of sand and one man is kept busy with a hose keeping the sand wet so the cement sets under dampness which keeps it from cracking. Every 50 feet strips of tar paper are put across the road bed which divides it into blocks and this allows for expansion, and in case of damage one block can be replaced without disturbing the rest. The sand will be removed when the cement is thoroughly hardened.

It is well worth one's while to go over the road and see what is being done.

We arrived at home about 2:00 p. m. perfectly willing to put the wheel into our back room and let it stay there for several days.
