CREATING PROSPERITY

L. SAMUEL, president of the Oregon Industry league, recently organized at Portland to create patriotic sentiment for home products, after an investigation of citizens, said among other things:

Only last week I noticed that during three days the foreign made checks of 23 Oregon banks passed through my place of business. It seems incomprehensible to me that an institution as closely identified and as much dependent upon the growth and prosperity of this state as is one of its banks, should send out of the state to have its checks printed when there are dozens of printing establishments in Oregon that can do the work just as well and just as cheaply as can the printers of California, Washington or New York.

Not only banks but many business houses set their communities bad examples by sending out of the state, or at least out of the city, for supplies they could secure at home and thereby help support home pay rolls and create an abiding local prosperity.

The Rogue River Valley's great competitor in the pear market is California, yet many orchardists, including some associations and companies, dependant entirely upon local cooperation and good will for success, send out Oregon fruit under labels printed in California, without even permitting local label makers to bid or compete for the business.

Did you ever hear of a California bank or a California fruit grower ordering anything made in Oregon? Or of paying taxes in Oregon? Or of keeping a payroll in Oregon? As Mr. Samuel concludes:

Californians will let you boost their game all you want to, but when it comes to selling them something, they are not there, if they can get what they want in California. The same condition exists in the state of Washington.

If Oregon people will support these Oregon industries and Oregon merchants and Oregon factories that are already established in the state, we can stop for a while advertising for more factories and more industries. We should be immensely more prosperous than we are if we would just stand loyally by those institutions that we already have, but we will never be prosperous until we learn to do this.

THE WISH FATHER OF THE CARTOON

THE Portland Oregonian printed July 1 a cartoon of the empty dinner pail and the democratic donkey weeping because of a $23,250,000 shortage for the fiscal year in national revenue, due to the new tariff.

The official statement carried by the Associated Press reads as follows: Washington, July 1.—Treasury figures completed tonight showed that the federal government went through its first fiscal year under the Wilson administration with its income exceeding ordinary expenses by $33,784,452.07.

Instead of a $23,250,000 deficit there is $33,784,452 surplus. The revenue loss caused by reduction in tariff duties from an average of 43 per cent to an average of 26 per cent, has been more than made up by income and corporation taxation—a lessening of the burdens of the many at the expense of the few.

The banks are full of money. The tariff and currency problems have been settled. The proposed anti-trust legislation will not disturb legitimate business. The greatest crops in the history of the world are being harvested and artificial efforts cannot further halt prosperity—which like a tidal wave will soon sweep over the nation, destroying once again the baleful influence of the money power by a restoration of normal business conditions.

The same edition of the Oregonian that prints the false cartoon, shows what hardships the democratic administration is working upon Oregon exports, and how the tariff has injured the export business:

New record made in year's exports. Gains reported in flour, barley and lumber and in wheat sent to California. Total value $12,983,361. Of 12,360,266 bushels of wheat floated from Portland for the cereal year ended yesterday, California purchased 6,666,573 bushels. This figure breaks all records for the amount of grain Portland has diverted to the sister state. The year previous the movement aggregated 6,462,434 bushels, also a record at that time. In shipping 1,154,561 barrels of flour, Portland exceeded the total exportation for the 1912-13 season by 19,250 barrels.

Henry H. Wright, Grand Old Man of the Siskiyou

To the Editor: The friends and acquaintances of the late Henry Wright of the Blue Ledge district, desire to correct misstatements in relation to the life led by Mr. Wright who was not a man of silence, but a direct contradiction of the description given him.

The world is better for him having lived. We regret that he met his death alone. He was apparently seeking to gain the home of some miner friend when death called him. He is gone, but his manly and noble life will remain a pleasant memory in the minds of those who knew him as a Grand Old Man of the Siskiyou.

He was courteous, gentlemanly and ever ready with an intelligent and sensible answer to any question. He never idled words. His questions and answers showed that they came from the mind of a man that was filled with a wealth of sound, clean and intelligent thoughts, and there is only one title that will fit the character of such an honorable man as the late Mr. Wright and that is "The Grand Old Man of the Siskiyou."

WASHINGTON, July 2.—A resolution designed to serve definite and final notice to business and the country that anti-trust legislation is to be passed before congress quits Washington was proposed by Senator Stone after a talk with President Wilson and with other democratic leaders yesterday. Senator Stone said it was intended as an answer to the propoganda for immediate adjournment of congress.

The Usual Silly Nonsense About the Administration and "Hard Times"

(From the Sacramento Bee) About the silliest and most nonsensical idea yet put forth is that the failure of the H. B. Claffin company is due to the Wilson administration. And yet thousands of otherwise intelligent people will believe it—citizens who really seem to have faith that the republican party causes the grass to grow, the waters to run, the sun to shine; that democratic success is the precursor of earthquakes and droughts, failures, disease, deaths, and all manner and kind of calamitous visitations.

Business would have cursed him from one end of the country to the other! And when only the Morgan rearing hand saved the same firm in 1907, while almost a legion of others went down the bank, it was not the fault of "the wise republican administration" of Theodore Roosevelt. Perish the thought!

Big Business is engaged in sending telegrams to President Wilson, placing the burden of the Claffin failure upon the administration's efforts for reform legislation. That is an old trick of Big Business.

Really, there is nothing to convey an adequate idea of such wild-and-woolly, utterly silly declamation concerning the administration burden in this matter, save the commonplace, very expressive vulgarism, "OH RATS!"

Whenever an honest and courageous president and congress endeavor to loosen the clutch of Big Business upon the throats of The People, said Big Business calls attention to every stumble in the commercial world, and says to the administration: Just see what you are doing! You are driving the country to hard times! The nation never breathes freely and naturally save when I have a Rockefeller-Morgan clutch on its windpipe.

For the convenience of patrons, the grocery stores and meat markets will remain open Friday evening. There will be no deliveries made Saturday.

And Big Business is not averse to doing more than that. It never has hesitated to manufacture "object lessons," with the purpose in view of prevailing upon the citizens to believe that hard times are inevitable when the government dares to interfere with its stranglehold.

There is absolutely no reason for the railroads of this country checking improvements and stopping work sadly needed, save that they desire to teach the government and the inter-state commerce commission a lesson—the lesson that the authorities must not interfere with the sacred rights of gigantic corporations to do just as they please, or said corporations will manufacture a panic and create hard times.

Manufactured panics before now have been the answer of throttling trusts to every effort to regulate them. There is not alone ample circumstantial evidence to justify that assertion—there have been practical admissions to that effect before congressional committees.

And yet many citizens today will argue that the government should not interfere with the divine right of these corporations to do just what they please: for, if it does its duty, "hard times will come again!"

The allegation that the present administration is responsible for the H. B. Claffin company trouble—which may not prove to be so much of a failure in the end, for even its creditors say it has $44,000,000 of assets to $30,000,000 of liabilities, but cannot at present realize upon said assets—is disproved by the fact that this is the concern's fourth "crisis" of the kind, and that all the others happened under republican administrations.

Of course, when H. B. Claffin & Company went almost to Hades during the Civil war, Abraham Lincoln was not to blame. But if a democrat had been in the presidential chair, it would have been his fault!

In 1873, when this firm rocked to its foundation, as hundreds of other big concerns went to smash, no censure was visited upon President Ulysses S. Grant. But if Horace Greeley had been in the White House, undoubtedly Big Business would have cursed him from one end of the country to the other!
