HUMBUG CREEK FIRE STILL RAGES

The forest fire at Humbug creek, in the Applegate section, reported to be under control yesterday, is still raging and is being fought by a large gang of fire fighters under the direction of the Jackson County Fire Patrol association and the forestry service.

It already has burned over six square miles of territory, destroying valuable timber. Unless a high wind starts, the association hopes to have the fire under control today.

The fire at Foothills creek is also proving hard to control. It is thought that it will be under control late this afternoon. A new fire has been reported at Talow Box mountain that has already burned a tract over three miles long, and one at Wellington Butte.

To make the fire-fighting system more efficient, a trail is being constructed along the Umpqua divide to shorten the distance to ranger stations in case fire should break out in that district.

This trail will also bring the Umpqua national forests and the Rogue national forests in more close union, so they can work together in case of fire.

result in the joy of peace and an honorable settlement.

LONDON, July 21.—While the leaders of the Liberals, Conservatives, Nationalists and Ulster Unionists were in conference today at Buckingham Palace endeavoring to find a solution of the home rule problem, preparations were being made by the chief Ulster organizer for a general election. He sent orders to all the constituencies to prepare for an election three weeks after the conference as the leaders are convinced that no matter what may be done at Buckingham Palace, the House of Commons must be dissolved.

During the time the conference sat around the table in Buckingham Palace, they found an opportunity to discuss many points of difference and before adjourning touched on the question of the exclusion of the county of Tyrone from the operations of the Irish home rule bill, a point which everybody recognizes as the most thorny one of the whole subject.

Conference to Decide The general impression prevails that the conference will settle this matter, since nobody believes that the question of the exclusion of one county will be allowed by eight politicians, possessing the ability of the conferees, to turn the scales for civil war.

At the same time it is not thought that parliament will accept any compromise going beyond the offers at ready made and refused and if the House of Commons did so, Ireland itself would not fall into line.

Liberals Back up Ireland A Liberal caucus summoned, as one of the leaders put it, to "back up" the British government, was attended by upwards of 100 Liberal members of the house of commons.

A resolution was passed to the effect that the members unwaveringly supported the claims of Ireland as put forward by the Nationalists and embodied in the Irish home rule bill, and the gathering showed a determination to see the cause finally won.

The meeting further expressed the opinion that it was the duty of the government to complete its whole program before making an appeal to the constituencies.

King George with Baron Stamfordham, his private secretary, received the statesmen in the chamber where the privy council always meets, and he shook hands cordially with all of them.

Friendly, Not Cordial Probably this was the first time that John B. Redmond and John Dillon, the Irish nationalist leaders, had ever exchanged greetings with their sovereign, as it had been the practice of the nationalist members of parliament to remain away from all functions where members of the house of commons were likely to be brought into contact with royalty.

The meeting of the conservative and liberal leaders on such intimate footing was apparently friendly, but could not have been cordial, as Premier Asquith and Andrew Bonar Law have been barely on speaking terms, as Mr. Law practically accused the premier in the house of commons of lying about recent government plans to suppress the Ulster volunteers.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, leader of the unionists in the house of lords, and David Lloyd-George, chancellor of the exchequer, two of the other conferees, represent the most extreme aristocratic and democratic schools of British politics, and are generally believed to be bitter personal enemies.

Atmosphere Chilly Since personal feelings among politicians in the United Kingdom never run so high as at present, the atmosphere of the gathering could not have been otherwise than extremely chilly and formal.

After a brief conversation, King George withdrew from the meeting. The conference, after being in session for only about an hour and a half, adjourned until tomorrow.

Maitre Labori was regarded by observing lawyers as a master stroke. Maitre Labori's voice was musical and full of dramatic feeling. When he had concluded, Paul Bourget remarked:

"Literature is not life." He agreed, however, that private letters ought not to be published and said he did not believe Calmette had intended to publish the Caillaux letters.

Other members of the staff of the Figaro then testified, among them Louis Latzarus, who gave a vivid description of the scene when Mme. Caillaux shot Calmette.

Latzarus said he heard shots and ran to Calmette's room where Calmette had sunk in a state of collapse in a chair. M. Sirac, he said, was holding a woman by the wrists. She cried: "Let me go. I am not going to escape."

Sirac then let her go, said the witness, and she stood near the door, clear-eyed and with her face neither pale nor flushed. She seemed un-troubled by the 15 editors who quickly gathered around her. "No Justice in France" "She began to speak," said the witness, "saying: 'Since there is no justice in France...'"

"Shut your mouth," said one of the editors. "After what you have done, keep quiet."

"I was not speaking to you," said Mme. Caillaux.

Latzarus declared that Mme. Caillaux was perfect mistress of herself when he saw her after the crime. He admitted that he had talked about the Caillaux case many times with Calmette, adding:

"My chief said he had diplomatic documents important enough absolutely to crush Caillaux."

After Calmette had printed the "Thy Joy" letter, according to Latzarus, he remarked: "My pockets are empty. I have nothing more."

Why She Was Calm Judge Abnani then asked Mme. Caillaux if she had anything to say about the Victor Fabre document, and Mme. Caillaux replied:

"I had no fear of that, because I knew the part my husband had taken in the Roquette affair."

Then, alluding to her calmness after the shooting, Mme. Caillaux said: "All the world knew that night the condition of Calmette except myself, and I did not know until the next day that my action was irreparable."

Maitre Labori remarked to the court that two of the documents found on the person of Gaston Calmette had been sent to President Poincare and that all the others had been sent to Georges Prestat, the president of the board of directors of the Figaro.

"I see that M. Prestat is among the spectators," continued Maitre Labori. "Perhaps he can tell the court what was done with those papers."

Burned the Letters "The papers I received," said M. Prestat on arising, "were only copies in the handwriting of M. Calmette. One was the Fabre document, then already published; the second was the 'Thy Joy' letter, from which the intimate passages had been expurgated. I considered I had the right to destroy those papers, and I burned them."

Then, turning toward the jury, M. Prestat said: "They had cost the life of my relative."

At half past four o'clock the court took a recess.

Mme. Caillaux took frequent notes of the testimony during the day, writing on a pad placed on her knees, and she accumulated quite a large portfolio.
