

SUMMER HOMES IN FOREST RESERVE AT NOMINAL RENT

Did you know that you could rent, at a nominal fee per annum, half an acre of ground within the national forest for a summer home and live there indefinitely?

According to the national forest manual, "The fullest use of the national forest lands and resources is desired and encouraged. Few people realize what this means. So much has been said of the commercial side of the national forest resources, of their worth to the nation as a business proposition, that little heed has been given to their value as a people's playground. Where can one find a more delightful recreation spot than in the beautiful forest?

Many a "sylvan scene" within the national forest boundary may be permanently enjoyed almost for the asking. Go into the forest and pick out your camping site along some stream or by the side of some lake or in the high mountains; then apply to the nearest supervisor for a permit to use half an acre or so of land on which to establish your camp. If your choice of a site does not interfere with other forest uses or interests, he will grant it to you upon the payment of the annual rental, which rental runs from $5 to $25, according to the location and the size of the camp site. Your permit is good indefinitely, the only requirement being that you comply with forest service regulations, chiefly in regard to sanitation and fire prevention.

Some few people have become wise to the possibilities of national forest camp sites and are already enjoying their summer homes. An example of this kind of special use is to be found in township 3 south, range 7 east, on the Oregon national forest, at the junction of Still creek and Zigzag river, where there is quite a summer colony. Several people applied to the supervisor for rentals, and as a result a tract of land along these two streams was surveyed and laid out in lots, thirty-one in all. They vary in size from 6 1/2 x 125 feet to 84 x 159 feet.

Klamath Lake Open Fifteen permits have already been granted, the permittees have built their homes and put in improvements, and appearances indicate that it will not be long before the balance of the lots will be taken up under the permit. The barlow road, which has recently been improved, runs through this tract, and it is only three hours' ride by automobile from Portland.

There are scattered lots and some surveyed tracts in other national forests of Washington and Oregon. In fact, there are splendid opportunities for summer camps in such localities as Klamath Lake, Oregon; Lake Chehalis, Lake Keechelus and Crescent Lake, Washington. Several summer hotels have been established within the forests, but there is still room for many individual camps or summer homes.

BUSINESS FINE IN DRY TOWNS

Arrests Fewer, Bank Deposits Greater

SALOONS ARE OCCUPIED

MERCHANTS ALL ENTHUSIASTIC—BUILDING PERMITS FAR GREATER—STORY OF DRY TOWNS TOLD.

There is only one fair way to find out what Oregon dry has done for those parts of Oregon now dry. It is by investigating what Oregon dry has done for those parts of Oregon now dry. So far as can be learned in Salem, Oregon City, Roseburg, Albany, Eugene and other Oregon dry towns, business has been better in all lines, save that of the saloon, in every dry town. Why, even in Pendleton, which voted wet after being dry, but which will probably vote dry, many merchants are now in favor of a dry town and declare collections were better, business better and bad debts fewer when the town was dry.

Better Building Results. In Salem, building has been greater since the town went dry. There are but few vacant houses, and those vacant are described as "shacks." Practically every saloon has been re-tenanted by other lines of business, and one of the principal saloon sites has been replaced by a fine new building block. Since Salem went dry a $20,000 brick building has been erected and a $40,000 business block is going up. Doesn't look as if dry Salem hurt that town, does it?

Salem went dry January 1, 1914. The building permits for the first eight months of 1913, when the town was wet, total $388,925. For the first eight months of 1914 they were $422,353, an increase of $33,428. Another instance of a dry town helping business is absence of the saloon always means better business, for the money that once went to the saloon goes into trade. Checks cashed once in saloons are cashed in stores—and part of them are spent there, in place of in the saloons.

There were 254 arrests for the first seven months of 1913 in Salem for drunkenness; in 1914 the arrests totaled only 47 for the same cause. Stores Enlarge Premises. The three largest stores have had to remodel their premises because of increased business, when other towns—wet at that—have been complaining. In Oregon City arrests have decreased 60 per cent. Violations of the state liquor laws (bootlegging and so forth) are now less than one-half.

You see the saloon men never used to obey the law—in a dry town they have to obey it. Bank Deposits Increase. Deposits in the banks have increased. There is more building. Bad debts are being cleared up. Collections are easier. Not one mill check has been cashed in a saloon. All business men say trade is better.

Which answers the question as to why the city has come from all over Oregon for a dry town. In Adams, one of the leading Oregon City merchants, said: "Since Oregon City went dry, business has much improved. Collections are easier. I have fewer bad bills on my books than I had a year ago. People now have a tendency to buy their goods at home. I used to cash 15 checks on mill pay nights. Now I cash 50. The abolition of the saloon has turned a vast sum of money daily into the channels of trade in Oregon City."

All of which answers the question of whether a town is better wet or dry.
