A slip and there would have been more work for the undertaker. INDIANS TELL OF GAMBLING GAMES BEFORE CRIME

Witnesses in the murder trial of Jim George in the federal court this morning testified to incidents of the twelve hours before the defendant, Jim George, and his young companion, Peter Brown, left the gambling grounds, where they had been celebrating Washington's birthday. It was minor testimony around which the government will wind its web of circumstantial evidence. The facts established were that Peter Brown and Jim George participated in the general gambling and whiskey orgy. One witness testified that he saw a revolver. All the witnesses were Indians, and in some cases an interpreter was called to transmit the testimony. The government expects to trace Jim George and Brown to within a mile of Pine cemetery, where the body was found. The case is one of the most interesting in the crime annals of Oregon, and is being watched with interest by lawyers, because it embraces all the details of a perfect circumstantial case, the federal authorities having no eyewitness to the crime itself. Love of drink, love of gambling and love of a woman are the basic motives around which the evidence clusters. All the witnesses in the case are now in the city, and the trial is expected to last three weeks. The government will call sixty witnesses and the defense forty. Upon the completion of this case, Judge Wolverton will leave for San Francisco to attend a session of the federal court of appeals.

REBELLION BREAKS OUT IN AFRICA AMONG DUTCH

CAPETOWN Union of South Africa, Oct. 13, via London, 11:27 a. m.—It has been officially announced here that a command under Colonel Maritz has rebelled in the northwest of the cape provinces. Martial law has been proclaimed throughout the union. The rebellion among the forces of the Northwest Cape province has been brewing since the resignation of General Beyers as commander-in-chief of the union forces. As soon as the government realized this situation, it sent Colonel Maritz to relieve Maritz of his command. Colonel Maritz then discovered that Maritz was commanding German troops as well as his own, and that he had German guns in his possession. Maritz, who had been given the German rank of general, had arrested those of his officers and men who were unwilling to join the Germans and had sent them as prisoners of war to German Southwest Africa. Guaranteed Independence According to an official statement, an agreement was drawn between Maritz and the governor of German Southwest Africa guaranteeing independence of the union as a republic, ceding Walfish Bay and other parts of the union to the Germans, and undertaking that the Germans should invade the union only if Maritz asked them to do so. Maritz boasted that he possessed large supplies of guns, rifles, ammunition and money obtained from the Germans, and that he would overrun the whole of South Africa. "In view of this state of affairs," concludes the official statement, "the government is taking drastic steps to quell this rebellion and punish all rebels and traitors according to their deserts." Solomon G. Maritz fought in the Boer war with the rank of commandant. News dispatches in the early part of November, 1901, described his military activity, and on December 10 of the same year he was reported wounded. Confronted With Rebellion In the summer of 1904 the administration of German Southwest Africa was confronted with a rebellion of the native hereros and in the early part of July Germany admitted her inability to cope with the movement. She asked aid of Great Britain. In response, the British government granted Germany permission to engage Maritz, who then had the title of general, as a military adviser to General Trotha, commander of the German troops in Southwest Africa. Two steamships conveyed General Maritz, ten Boer officers and 500 Boer marksmen, from Cape Town to
