The Ashland and local high school basket ball teams meet on the Natatorium floor tonight in the third game of the series. Both teams have been doing some strenuous work during the past week endeavoring to fathom the mystery of each other's style of play. It is said that the team work of Ashland is noticeably lacking but thus far they have held a trump hand in the series, trimming Medford once and losing once. The local girls have a decided advantage over the red and white representatives and will probably take the game by a large count. In anticipation of a big event elaborate preparations have been made to entertain.

The insurance rate on the city fire truck is exorbitant according to the city council. An effort is being made to have the rates reduced. It is held that with efficient firemen watching over it the truck is not likely to be destroyed by fire. It is probable that a policy of $2000 will be taken on the city hall instead of $4000 as first thought advisable.

STATE RESTS IN MARTIN CASE
tin, and if there is any shooting to be done, I'll get in on it, too." The witness attributed a vile epithet directed against Martin. The witness said he told a friend of his to tell Martin to watch out for Hubbard. He had made "some hard cracks."
At the time of the conversation Woods said Childreth was shoring Hubbard's horse, and that Childreth, just as he (Woods) appeared, said: "You want him shod so you can go like the devil in case anything happens." The alleged threat came directly after this remark. The witness spent a half hour under the stern cross-examination.
Hubbard's Threats
H. S. Harnish of Eagle Point testified that a day or so before the murder Hubbard stopped at his stable and told of his trip to the hills, remarking that it seemed that the people at Butte Falls always knew when he was coming. The witness said Hubbard said: "I'll show them smart guys a trick before I get through this time." The witness said he told this only to members of his family and Mr. Von der Hellen, until a Mr. Rhodes, living near Eagle Point, told him to go to Attorney Reames' office.
Terrell, the first witness called by the defense, was called as a juror; his statements in the box resulting in his being called as a witness. Discrepancies between his words after he left the box and when on the stand were the subject of a spirited cross-examination.
Tell of Martin's Threats
All the three witnesses for the state at the morning session told of threats Martin is said to have made against the life of Hubbard. The state in resting reserved the right to call D. M. Lowe of Ashland, in charge of the Jackson county exhibit at the San Francisco fair, as a witness in rebuttal.

Low, who will arrive from the south today and is expected to testify, although it is not definitely known to be threats made by Martin.
It is expected that Martin will be called as a witness in his own behalf either this afternoon or in the morning, and will probably close the evidence of the defense. It is not known whether Mar in's mother will be called as a witness or not. The case is progressing faster to date than expected. Martin was cheerful this morning and showed but little sign of worry.
Singler on Stand
Sheriff Singler, the first witness at the morning session, told of the arrest of Martin on the trail near Trail the morning after the killing. The defendant, the official said, handed him his rifle with the barrel out, told him it was loaded and to be careful. The sheriff said he told Martin he was sorry the shooting occurred, shook hands with him and placed him under arrest. The prisoner offered no resistance, the witness said, to this procedure. The rifle was introduced in evidence.
Mrs. Zelma Van Dyke testified about a meeting, with Martin the morning after the murder, when he showed nervousness and remorse. Mrs. Van Dyke was housekeeper for Mrs. Skyrman, Martin's sister, and Martin came to the kitchen door, rifle in hand. He was nervous, she said, and walked up and down, betraying excitement. She invited him in and his first query was if she had heard "what had happened." She replied she had, and asked if he was going to give himself up without trouble. Martin said he was, the witness said.
Why He Surrendered
"You know, Mrs. Van Dyke testified Martin said, "the hills are covered with snow, and if I tried to get away I'd lead a dog's life for a year, and they'd get me in the end anyhow."
The witness, the defendant and a Miss Dow then went down the road, Martin promising to give himself up. They objected to his carrying his rifle, Martin saying that he wanted to be prepared for any trouble. On the trip Martin gripped his rifle nervously when a twig cracked. The two women calmed him. The witness said she used her influence to induce Martin to surrender without resistance.
Van Dyke Repeats Threats
Ed Van Dyke, sleepy-eyed and contrite after his libulous testimony of Thursday, was brought from the county jail to testify against his friend on trial. He told of a conversation he had with Martin two days before the murder, when a visit of Hubbard to the Trail district was discussed.
"Hubbard was down at Daw's last week," the witness said he told Martin while the latter was on a visit to his cabin.

"I wonder if he's coming up any farther?"
"He better not come up any farther," he witness said Martin replied.
On cross-examination the defense tried to discredit the witness' testimony by a series of questions trying to show that he had conversed with Andy Poole on the testimony. The witness said Poole asked him while on a visit to the Poole home if he would not testify to what occurred when the threat was made.
Cut Down Two Trees
Van Dyke told of helping Martin cut down two trees that endangered the prisoner's cabin. The witness said he talked to a game warden, but did not discuss in detail his testimony. The witness said he could not remember and was contradictory on minor details.

The witness was dismissed for further examination. The court told Van Dyke that he must refrain from the use of liquor during the trial or suffer a severe penalty for contempt of court. The court remanded Van Dyke to the care of the sheriff. Prosecuting Attorney Kelly said Van Dyke was on the blacklist and that his liquor was secured from other sources. The court ordered that an effort be made to discover who plied him with intoxicants while under the jurisdiction of the court. The court expressed sympathy with any man addicted to the liquor habit.
