A MADMAN'S ACT

THE relapse of the German war lord into barbarism is complete. Boasted efficiency but ministers to blood Office Mail Tribune Building, 26-27-29 list and science becomes a strumpet for Mars. Treaties are but scraps of paper to be torn up at will, and honor the idle dream of an idealist. Shattered are the fragments of international law. Gone is the thin veneer of civilization. In the scrap heap lies the progress of centuries and from the ruins emerges the gorilla-like figure of the prim-

From the ruthless rape of Belgium to the poison-exhaling bombs of Ypres, from the Zeppelins spilling disaster on innocents from the heavens, to submarines darting death to neutrals from under the sea, from the wanton destruction of storied Louvain to the sinking of the Lusitania, runs a narrative of brutal outrage that dims the thousandyear-old record of Attilla the Hun as the scourge of

This is not warfare—it is premeditated murder. Such acts are the wonton crimes of a paranoiac, of a ruler crazed by militarism and insane from power-whose taint calls, like an ancient heathen deity, for the continual sacrifice of innocents. And the blood lust has stained the nation he rules so that in its warped and twisted vision, murder of the helpless is applauded as a feat of valor and rewarded—a cheap substitute for heroism.

Of all the blunders of the kaiser's blundering diplomacy, the most stupid is the destruction of the Lusitania. How can he expect the sympathy of neutrals when he deliberately violates international law in their destruction! What can the vandalism accomplish save excite the detestation of mankind, alienate the sympathy of the world and make it shudder in horror at his blood-lust?

MOUNT M'LOUGHLIN

DESPITE efforts to correct the mistake, the name of Mt. Pitt is still erroneously applied to Mt. McLoughlin, the snow-capped sentinel of the Rogue River valley, whose symetry and beauty deserves a better fate.

Who was Pitt and what did he do for Oregon to deserve such an eternal monument? Pitt was the English statesman who guided the destiny of Britain in the long struggle against Napoleon. He never heard of Oregon.

In 1832 Donald McKay a Hudson Bay trapper, named the mountain McLoughlin, in honor of Dr. John McLoughlin, then factor of the Hudson's Bay company at Vancouver, the founder of Oregon City and the first white resident of Oregon, and it has never since been officially
