H.S. GRADS WILL PULL WEEDS AS PRANK PENALTY

The entire male portion of the graduating class of the Medford high school, "nine proceri ubi ancora iacimus," as their class motto states, will start life in that un-Latin occupation of pulling and cutting weeds. Sixteen of them appeared this morning before Police Judge Gay, and were sentenced to manual labor as punishment for tearing down and hiding business signs, on a tour of the business district Monday night. It was explained to the court that the episode was only a "high school joke." The court held that the damage to property was "no joke."

The sentence of the court was that the boys should before next Monday clean and pull the weeds in the parking in front of some other boys home. Harold Grey, the youngest member of the class, was named to see that the work was done. It was further provided that if any one balked at his task he would be again haled before the court and assigned to cleaning up the city park after the Memorial day celebration. The boys will hold a meeting this evening to allot work.

The young men "standing on the threshold of life, and facing the world," as the class orator will say, who will start with a police court penalty attachment are: Jay Gore, Robert Pelouse, Dean Carler, Harold Grey, Earl Hubbard, Dolph Phipps, Glenn Simmons, Miles Gammill, Chester Baker, Walter Brown, Griffith Cowgill, James Vance, Glenn Stull, Charles Ray, Clinton Purkeyffe and Claren Jaqua.

"TRAP" AS WELL AS "SWAT" THE FLY

Here are the plans for a "fly trap" for the boy who wants to have the fun of making things and at the same time help his mother keep the house free of flies this summer.

The material for one of these traps does not cost more than 10 or 20 cents and any boy who is handy with tools can make one in a short while. Half-inch pine and a small quantity of wire netting, the kind used for window screens, is all that is necessary. The best size is one 16 inches long, 12 inches high and 8 inches wide. Sour milk, a piece of banana, or some other fruit skin makes a good bait, and the flies that are caught each day should be killed by pouring hot water over the trap or by leaving it immersed in water until the flies are dead. The bait should be removed at night or it will attract ants.

The fly trap is made in three distinct parts (A, B and C) as shown in the accompanying illustration. These may be detached from one another by unfastening the hooks (D) that hold them together at either end. The trap must be unhooked to place the bait on the two pieces of tin (E) tacked to the bottom section.
