

CHILDREN'S DAY OBSERVED SUNDAY METHODIST CHURCH

Children's Day will be celebrated at the First Methodist Episcopal church, corner of Fourth and Bartlett streets Sunday in remarkable services under the direction of the board of education. The program, under the general title, "The Children's Hour," has been authorized by the Corresponding Secretary Thomas Nicholson of New York.

A strong local committee has followed the suggestions that Children's Day this year be a real educational day, providing for morning and evening services in the church and Sunday school.

The pastor has given way to the regular order for preaching services and instead of the evening sermon will deliver an address on the subject "A Christian Education."

The special music and decorations will be appropriate to the occasion. During the Sunday school hour the children who have been under the pastor's instruction in preparation for membership in the church, will receive baptism and be received into membership.

Parents will present cradle roll babies for baptism at the opening of the hour for the morning service, 11 a. m.

All are welcome to participate in the delightful services of the day.

DRAMA LEAGUE NOTES

Members of the Medford Drama league are reminded that Maude Adams will appear at the Page theatre next Wednesday night in "Quality Street." It is scarcely necessary to urge them to attend, as apparently everyone in Medford is going, but those who want good seats are advised to make their reservations early, as Miss Adams has never failed to call out the S. R. O. sign in Medford. As will be recalled, the Page theatre was opened by Miss Adams in "Peter Pan," and has been one of the most popular plays this most popular American actress has ever presented. An effort was made by the league to have Miss Adams give a talk the afternoon of the performance to the members, but it was found that this would be impossible. Since the Lusitania disaster when Mr. Frohman was drowned, Miss Adams has been forced to eliminate all social and public demands other than those required in the routine of her profession.

Annual School Meeting.

The annual meeting of school district No. 49 (Medford) will be held at the high school building in this city Monday, June 21, at 2 p. m., at which time one school director will be elected for a term of five years and to transact such other business as should come before such meeting. The polls for the election will be open from 2 to 6 p. m. on above date.

H. S. STINE, Secretary.

MAUDE ADAMS IN 'QUALITY STREET' AT PAGE THEATRE WEDNESDAY JUNE 16

Maude Adams will be seen in J. M. Barrie's charming comedy, "Quality Street," at the Page theatre June 16. This announcement will no doubt prove pleasing to any number of the admirers of the actress for Mr. Barrie's play, which is one of his early successes, will be recalled as one of the most delightful comedies that has come from his pen. "The Little Minister" was the first long work by the Scotch author that was made known in this country by Miss Adams. It was followed by "Quality Street" and its ineffable sweetness won for it considerable success. The actress was compelled to lay aside the play through the production of other works long before it had been given in any but the largest cities. Hence the comedy is practically new in a large portion of the country. Miss Adams has been very anxious to revive the play for some time, and even went so far two seasons ago as to engage a company for it. The success of the revival of "Peter Pan" was so great, however, that it pushed all of her plans into the background. The actress made up her mind this season that she would add "Quality Street" to her repertoire and that she would not allow anything to stop her. "And when a woman will she will, and there's an end on't." The comedy portrays life in a small English town and deals principally with two sisters and the love affair of one of them, Phoebe Throssell, the role played by Miss Adams. The actress is surrounded by a very efficient company.

ITALIANS PRIZE CAPTURED AQUILEIA FROM SENTIMENT

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 10.—Aquilaia, one of the first towns captured by the Italians in their storm across the Austrian borders at the head of the Adriatic, stands foremost among the Austrian Italian-speaking possessions in the sentimental attachment of the patriotic sons of Italy. Why the Italian takes so deep an interest in this decaying little frontier village is told in a statement on war geography, recently prepared by the National Geographic Society. This statement reads:

Once Great Seaport.
"Aquilaia, situated six miles back from the Adriatic sea, at the edge of the lagoons in the Austrian province of Goerz and Gradisca, was once a great and flourishing seaport, at one time ranking as the second city of Italy. It was, in those days, one of the mightiest bulwarks of the Roman Empire against the pressing hordes of outside barbarians, a city of 'proud walls and wide bespoken splendor.' As late as the end of the fourth century, Ausonius placed it ninth on the list of the great cities of the earth.

"Today, Aquileia is a mean, poverty-marked, dwindling fishing village, with a few thousand inhabitants. The wonderful structures of its heyday have served for centuries as stone quarries, and nothing now remains of their fabulous splendor. Aquileia, regal city of the empire, and, later, great seaport and industrial city, has vanished, in all likelihood, for good. There remains from its golden days merely a heterogeneous mass of relics, statues, Mosacs, columns, friezes, from its parks and buildings; lamps from its once famous factories; besides many homely survivals and nicknames.

Triest, Rome, Aquileia

"Triest, the great seaport of today, is about twenty-five miles distant, to the southwest. All the marks of the prosperity and importance of Aquileia have fled to Triest. In the east, and to Venice in the west. The once busy harbor is choked with silt and drifting dunes, while rafts and fishing boats are almost the only craft that now thread the varying channels. The modern village, counting 2200 people, in unhealthy on account of its rice fields; is neglected and forgotten.

"Aquilaia is a grave of past achievement, and a much weathered monument to the world of the Roman Age. Its museum is rich in trophies of Roman times, and its ancient cathedral and the remains of the Patriarch's palace are its most eloquent concrete memories. Aquileia, as is much of the northern and western coast of the Adriatic, is a rich field for archeologists and antiquarians.

Colonized in 183 B. C.

"The city is said to have been colonized by the Romans as a frontier fortress against the Celts in 183 B. C. In 168 A. D. Marcus Aurelius

If ev'ry man's name described him as well as VELVET'S name describes it, a lot of folks I know would be applyin' to the legislature.
