A suitcase containing the loot was shipped to Reno, Nev., by an accomplice of the gang, the operations of which were revealed by the confession of the youngest member—fourteen year old boy named Jimmy Wilson. It is expected that as soon as the California authorities have finished using the jewelry as evidence it will be shipped back to the owner in this city. Most of the jewelry was heirlooms of the Jones' family and highly prized. Though confident of their guilt when arrested in this city, the authorities could not hold them on account of insufficiency of evidence and incomplete identification.
