"DESTINY"

"The Soul of a Woman"

Introducing the Suberb Emotional Actress

Late of W. A. Brady's "Today" Co.

A powerful allegorical study which is intensely interesting, seenically beautiful. Rich and striking photographic effects. Notably so is the cafe scene, whither the young novice goes to view the world. When runs, just and avarice tempt the boy, their shadows are seen to leave their bodies and go over to whisper in the lad's ear, while their bodies remain in their seats.

This photo-drama is a rate example of the extent to which real art can be carried in such a commercial basiness, and the fact that art can be carried to such an extent in commerce may explain in part why the film has such a grip on the public.
