one neighbor cannot suspend liquor in his home to another neighbor. A man cannot purchase liquor outside of the state and deliver them himself to his own home. They must be taken there by an authorized common carrier and the conditions under which they may be so delivered are fully specified.

So far, he says, there appears to be a disposition to yield to the situation without the intervention of the boot-licker. He will probably appear later—after the prohibition situation shall have become somewhat "institutionalized."
