Albert Jansen, of Minneapolis, Minn., is a visitor in the valley for an indefinite period. Mr. Jansen has devoted many years to corn production, but, having heard that the soil and climate of this region are adapted to corn production in enormous yields, he concluded that he could well afford to spend some of the corn money he has put away in making a home in this attractive region. He is immediately pleased with the valley, so far as he has been able to see it. He will probably send for his family during the month.

STYLE SHOW AT PAGE PLEASING

In addition to the magnificent display of fabrics of all kinds and in the newest and most striking designs at the May company's opening yesterday, that company will put on living models at the Page theater during the week, showing the latest and most fetching styles. This promises to attract an extraordinary attendance at the Page.

The opening yesterday at the May company's department store was an ambitious and auspicious business and social event. The social features consisted in the assemblage of the ladies in convenient corners for the discussion of the new styles and the announcement of individual choices and the review of community events generally, both past and in prospect.

From 2:30 to 4:30 yesterday afternoon throngs of women crowded the great emporium of ladies' goods in every department of apparel materials used—some eagerly interested, some amazed at the metropolitan display and all charmed with the artistic artistry of the arrangement. Classic music discoursed by Howe's orchestra delighted the crowds that came from all of the colonies round about and stayed to enjoy the unusual fete. It was a gala day for the women of Medford and vicinity, and reminded one of the surging crowds in the great opening days of big department stores of a metropolis.

Nothing to surpass the May company's opening day of spring display has ever been seen in any other city between Portland and Sacramento. The spirit of enterprise manifested by Mr. Thompson of the May company has produced a result, of which not only its owners, but patrons as well, are justly proud.
