PREPAREDNESS MAKES SUCCESS IN FRUIT RAISING

"I would buy Rogue river ovelurals today more cheerfully than ever if I had the money," sand Dr. E. B. Pickel in the presence of a party of estimens who were discussing the present situation as enlivered by recent frost injury. "Just two things are required to make orcharding a rise success in this valley," continued the doctor, "and they are adequate preparation to protect the orelands from frost and from drouth. The lower can be done inexpensively, in proportion to the great benefit derived, and the latfor, an absolute necessity, will pracheally double the value of the output. These things provided, and there will be no excuse for one not having the best fruit district in proportion to its area, on the Pacific roast today.

"Had we been provided with helgation during the last two sensons in which we suffered from drouth on account of its absence, we would not now hear any local bard-times talk. But we weren't prepared. Had we had umple freet protection this year, as should have had the foresight to rovide, we would not now be talking

"Almut it all there is one good thing. That is the lesson there is in that's not so had for one season. But the only way we can turn it to profit s by using the lesson in proper and adequate preparation against drouth way we can come out about ou had year and this."
