Great Britain has no sympathy with the German point of view and demands the submarines observe the rules of visit and search without exception.

On the other hand Great Britain declares that on account of the new conditions resulting from the submarine activity and the use of mines and complications. The question was set- naturalness and a sort of pathetic gree. from the geographical position of Germany, she cannot conform to the established rules of blockade and contraband and we should not, therefore, hold her to strict compliance with those rules. Germany insists, nevertheless, that Great Britain be made to follow the existing law.

The only alternative is for this government to hold firmly to those neutral rights which international law clearly has defined and to insist vigorously on their observance. In not the slightest degree can the settled rules be modified unless all the parties consent to the modifications.

This has been the position of the United States from the beginning of evening. It was in honor of their the war. If twice has sought to obtain mutual consent from the beiligerents silver wedding anniversary. The door to certain changes in the rules, but in both cases it falled, and the suggestions were withdrawn.

The secretary called attention to clamor raised by commercial interests because the government does not place human life and property upon an equality and has not exerted as much pressure to protect property as it has life, and asks if the sensibilities of Americans "have become so blunted by materialism that they think as much of the loss of their property as they do of the loss of the lives of their fellow Americans." He concludes by asking if the "great heart of the republic is threatened with fatty degeneracy meats and fish.—The Kanogan through those who have lost their patriotic vigor.

Mr. Lansing replies to critics by asking them what they would do if the responsibility was placed upon them, and concludes:

Would they make demands when it was questionable whother they could compel compliance? Would they count the full cost of their action? Responsibility makes a world of difference in a man's point of view. When a few words may plunge this country into war, the man who has the power to utter those words will think a long, long time before he exercises that power. Only the supreme necessity of maintaing the honor of United States or of defending its independence and the liberties of its people will induce him to speak the fateful words which may bring death to thousands of his fellow-countrymen and change the destinies of the republic.

Tacse who are prone to blame the government because it does not demand and threaten ought to consider seriously what it would mean to the tion if their wishes were carried out. If they were responsible for the consequences would they give the counsel, which as private citizens, they are so ready to give?
