

IN SERVING RICH HUGHES BELIEVES HE SERVES GOD

Mind of Candidate as Analyzed by Charles Edward Russell—An Honest Man and a Puritan—Believes in Good Old Theory of Good Men and Bad Men and Corking Campaign.

By CHARLES EDWARD RUSSELL. WASHINGTON, June 19.—The republicans have nominated one of the most honest men in the United States and the biggest asset of the interests. Some men serve the interest knowing full well that the service is rotten and the interests are rotten, but taking refuge from themselves in cynicism or drink. There isn't a cynical hair in all the whiskers of Charles Evans Hughes, and he would die before he would take a drink. He doesn't need any refuge from himself. He serves the interests with gladness, implicitly believing that he is thereby serving God. This is a remarkable mind, and if the democrats think they have taken on anything soft they had better save time by coming out of their trance now and before a swift punch of the Hughes kind jolts them out. The punches will begin to fall around when the republican candidate gets out on the stump, and, believe me, there will be some sick democrats about that time.

A Puritan on the Level. Hughes has a mind as rectangular as a dry goods box, as hard as iron and as regular in its operations as a marine engine. He is a Puritan of 1623, only on the level. He believes in the good old theory of good men and bad men; believes in it just as he believes in the Bible, the ten commandments and baptism by immersion.

To the good men in the world God has committed the property interests—railroads, oil and coal supplies and most of the wealth. When, therefore, he presences such men in the possession of what has been divinely bestowed upon them, he is serving God.

Bad men are political bosses, saloon keepers, racetrack gamblers, demagogues and low, ignorant persons that seek in some way to disturb good men in the quiet possession of the gifts of Providence. Therefore such men are to be condemned.

As to these United States, most things are perfect, and as they ought to be, and if here and there appears a small defect, why, let it be remedied by the good men, for these have constantly before them the ideals of righteousness and good citizenship.

But at all times have the larrikin ready against bad men.

A more honest person than Hughes never went on two feet. He believes all this without the slightest question and can defend and uphold it in a way that makes any opponents feel tired. When he delivers a speech he gets about nine-tenths of his audience into a corner and hammers those things into them with both hands. Then he clamps down the door upon their intellects, elents it and goes away, serenely uplifted with the consciousness of duty performed.

How Hughes Handles Audience. He understands the average American mind better than any other man in politics, but he never suspects that he understands it. He never gives the subject a thought. He just goes out and uncorks himself and his astonished and delighted listeners perceive that he is telling them exactly what they have thought or felt or believed in, and they like it. They like it so well that they weave a halo around his head and call him a reformer of the true type and never forget him.

Nothing seems funny to Hughes. He hasn't laughed for so long that if he should laugh now he would probably feel shocked and humiliated. He is on a mission of righteousness and that is dead serious business. No matter what he does, it is adjusted in his mind to a certain pattern of conduct propagated there by this good man and bad man idea; and if the masses of the people don't see how he will go patiently out and explain how and turn the thing inside out and preach them a sermon about it as long as the moral law and somewhat drier, and then you can bet they will see it and say he is dead right and the kind of a reformer they believe in.

Got Away With Many Things. He has a marvelous record and has gotten away with more things that seemed impossible than any other man in public life. When after many years of weary struggle with a practical corporation the people of New York City got the legislature to pass a law establishing a five-cent fare to Long Island and together Hughes voted it, you would think he would have been mobbed. But he wasn't. He vetoed that bill because he honestly believed God had ordained that company to gouge 20 cents out of every workman that wanted to get a breath of fresh air on Sunday, and he made people believe it in spite of themselves.

When he protected Tom Ryan and E. H. Harriman in the insurance investigation he did it because he honestly believed they were good men and could do no wrong, being rich.

When he vetoed the 2-cent fare bill he honestly believed that a railroad company six times overcapitalized was entitled to gouge from the public full profits on its fraudulent capitalization. Railroads are the property of good men.

Charter to Practice Piracy. When he invented the public service commission to prevent street railroads from becoming publicly owned he honestly believed that these exploiters had a charter from on high to practice piracy.

When he went out to fight Boss Barnes he hit him a wallop that resounded across the state, because Boss Barnes was a bad man and with such Hughes will have no commerce.

He is not rated as an orator, but he is the best campaigner in our fair land, bar none. He never pulls any of that W. J. Bryan stale gingerbread stuff, but he knows how to spiel, all right. He can talk about good citizenship until he would get a wooden Indian going, and when it comes to platitudes and the pure guff, stuff he has a line that makes Bryan look like a piker.

A campaign between Woodrow Wilson and Charles Evans Hughes will be for the belt and the world's championship along these lines. The whole country will wade to its neck in platitudes, commonplace, chestnuts, rare old antiques of economics and morals, grandmotherly sentiments and words.

Value of Whiskers. Hughes ought to win. He's got whiskers. The value of whiskers is that behind that bit of brushwood you can make people believe that you believe it yourself. This isn't fair. A presidential candidate that wears whiskers ought to be compelled to shave them off or else to carry weights for age.

GATES MEDFORD'S CHARLIE CHAPLIN

Hundreds of people Friday saw their friends and neighbors in action in the first moving picture comedy ever acted in Medford. C. E. Gates, Lowe Zundel and Carl Tengwald in the leading parts elicited favorable comments.

Many clever situations were evolved. The trick camera work was used to good advantage, the sealing of fences, high barns, auto garages and the shoot the chutes were applauded. One scene in particular is worth mentioning, when a tramp is seen sitting upon the trolley tracks eating his pie when a ear approaches and runs into him, picking him up on the fender and carrying him out of the scene.

In the shooting scene on Main street Chief of Police Hittson took six shots at the fleeing tramp, but the tramp was later seen running down South Oakdale street. The arrival of the tramp in a side door Pullman and his subsequent chase through the railroad yards precedes the showing of a picnic scene on the library lawn. Before discovering the picnic the tramp (Pop Gates), however, makes an unsuccessful attempt to secure a handout at the homes of Mrs. J. C. Mann and Mrs. Katie Emig, the latter turning the hose upon him.

Arriving at the library, the tramp makes off with a pie. This is what starts the trouble. After this, things move rapidly until he is placed under arrest. Twenty well-known ladies are featured in the picture, as well as hundreds of others who were in the picnic scene.

THE "ENDLESS CHAIN" DANGER OF CATARRH

S. S. S. the Proper Safeguard.

Catarrh is a "cold" in its chronic form. The air is filled with bacteria which is taken into the mouth and nose through the process of breathing. When the body is in a healthy condition no harm results. But with our modern methods of indoor living and sedentary occupations, the mucous membranes are easily not able to "throw-off" this harmful bacteria, making catarrh a very common ailment. These germs breed and multiply, causing inflammation, the blood rushes to the membranes to fight off the bacilli. When the blood is in a vigorous condition its "defensive" efforts are successful. Otherwise the cold "hangs on"—turns into catarrh.

Catarrh is a chronic inflammation of the mucous membranes. Science men believe are the living on all the internal cavities of the body. Get that—All cavities! There is the "endless chain" element of danger. The only way to treat catarrh is to purify the blood. The surest way to purify the blood is to take S. S. S. Write us for special advice. S. S. S.
