NEW CULTURIST FOR FISH STATION; PLANT ENLARGED

Dick Mitchell, state superintendent of the United States bureau of fisheries, spent Thursday in Medford on his return from the Elk creek hatchery. Van E. Heffner of Sparzian, S. D., said to be the best trout culturist in the department, accompanied him to Elk creek, where he will hereafter be in charge of the work, succeeding Arch Campbell, who has been transferred to Duluth and is leaving with his family for that point. Only a million and a half Chinook salmon eggs have been taken at Elk creek station this year, the highest take in years. A light egg take is also reported on the Columbia and other western streams, despite fair packs of salmon at the mouth of the stream. As all fish runs are late this year and no silversides have yet entered the river, operations will be extended for some time yet. Extensive improvements are contemplated at the Elk creek hatchery for the coming season, and the capacity will be much increased. Twenty cement ponds and four large earth ponds will be built. The old hatching houses will be done away with and a large one built that will hold 100 troughs. This, with the new ponds, will enable the holding of three million fry to the fingerling stage and solve the re-stocking problem. A new water wheel will also be added.
