ELECTRIC SHOP

The Comfort Car

By WALT MASON

Now this is how your uncle feels: A car may have gold-plated wheels, upholstery with silken hems and fenders studded o'er with gems; but if it jars me when I ride and shakes my organs up inside, and shoves my spine up through my hat; well, then, I want no more of that.

You know just how it is with nags; a man has one of which he brags; there's not a blemish on its frame, it looks superb and sound and game, but when you pay your money down and try to drive it out of town it bucks around and throws a fit and leaves your heart and dashboard split. The finest, smoothest, slickest boss may be at work a total loss.

And sometimes man will buy a car that glitters like the polar star; it looks so nifty and serene he thinks that buying gasoline for such a car will be a treat, it's good enough, in looks, to eat. But when he starts from his abode to take a jaunt along the road, his boat will jar and skid and slide till it's a punishment to ride. And ever, as he reels along, there's some dad-busted thing goes wrong; he's always lifting up the hood, to ask the engine to be good, or crawling underneath the works to see what causes all those jerks. He never knows a minute's peace; he's mad and spotted up with grease. A car like that, that's never right, can bring no comfort or delight. And if you take a good, long ride across the blooming countryside, you'll see a dozen hoodoo boats that strive to get their owner's goats.

Everybody of course knows that automobile tires wear out, but few realize the vast mileage that must be traveled by automobiles to wear them out. One big tire making concern which last year manufactured 3,500,000 auto tires figured that automobiles would have to travel 4,375,000,000 miles to put the annual product out of commission. In other words, the machine—if only one machine were used—would have to travel a distance equal to 175,000 times around the world or make 24 round trips between the sun and earth.
