EM-TEES

YES! YES! GO ON! Another good thing about the war. If we send an army to Europe and when they come back it'll put an end to the high-brows, bone chatter: "When I was in Paris," "As we motored through London," etc.

Well, folks, it's two out, the Kaiser up, with two strikes and lard on the hat. All right, uncle, give him the fadeaway.

Only thing left for the pacifists to do now is put up a yodel on the coming fly swatting campaign.

Der Kaiser is playing a straight game except for the five aces.

Only people that Bill hasn't tried to cook up a stunt with against us is the Eskimos. Might get them to rub poison ivy on the north pole.

VOX POP!

Not that we've got anything against Kaiser Bill. Every man has his faults, but Bill seems to be gifted with them. He's a rain check after the sixth inning—His word is good, so does a Toadstool look like a mushroom—He believes He's right, and you can't tell a stew. He ain't sober, Bill, the Only trouble With you is—You're wet Kindling wood, A busted Shoe lace, H-2-O in The carburetor, And all wrong, Outside of that Bill, you're All right, like A lead Two-bit piece, Hats off to You Bill When they Pat your face With a shovel, Then bon voyage Bill, take a Fan along.

DEEP SNOWS SUSPEND MINING, PALMER CREEK

J. S. Winchell, who spent the past three months of the Monarch mine on Palmer creek, arrived home Wednesday to spend a few days with his family and looking after business matters. The Monarch mine is 50 miles from Grants Pass and about 13 miles from Ruch, and during the winter the snow was so deep that operations were suspended until late in March. While the Monarch is a quartz proposition and is equipped with a Gibson mill, shiner gears prominent part, and the decomposed quartz is sluiced in order to remove all clay and the country rock, the clean up from this slurry being considerable. This property, although some of the ore runs as high as $300 per ton, is considered a low grade proposition. It is owned by Torrey & Windell.—Grants Pass Courier.

HOW AMERICANS CAN SERVE THEIR COUNTRY.

(From the New York World.)

MILLIONS of Americans are impatient to know how they can best serve their country in this war.

It is a noble and generous impatience, but in all seriousness it must be said that most of them can render no greater service than to proceed soberly and earnestly with their daily appointed tasks. When the government needs them, it will ask them, as it has asked for recruits for the navy and the regular army; but until it requires their services elsewhere, they cannot do better than to go about their regular work, doing it, if possible, a little more efficiently than they have hitherto done it.

This war is unlike any other war. It is only the privileged few who wear the uniform and bear the heat and burden of battle. Most of the fighting is done by those who wear no uniform and are many miles from the trenches.

It is a war that must be won on the farms, in the factories, in the ship-yards and in the counting-rooms. It must be won not by soldiers alone but by civilians—by men and women alike, by boys and girls. Everybody who raises food, everybody whose day's work adds to the wealth and resources of the country, everybody who helps to sustain American industries is doing his bit.

Our government is in a position to profit by the mistakes that Great Britain made in the war, and the British mistakes are the most important to us because our condition most closely resembles that of the British. The first of these mistakes was in assuming that it would be a short war and thereby failing to make adequate provisions for a long war. The war, so far as we are concerned, may be short. It will unquestionably be shortened by the entrance of the United States, but in the light of Great Britain's experience this government cannot afford to take chances on an early peace.

The finances of the country can be easily mobilized, and so can the industries. It will not be so easy a matter to mobilize the man-power, but fortunately it is a task that need not be done in a hurry. The United States must train and drill a large army for eventualities, but this army can be provided methodically and with due regard to the successful carrying on of vital industries.

We cannot send troops to Europe at once, unless it be a division of the regular army for sentimental reasons. We have no troops outside of the regulars who are fit for trench warfare or who can be trained for trench warfare before the end of the year. Even if we had troops there are no ships to carry them, for to divert our shipping to transport service would mean starvation to the French and British.

Co-operation with the allies simplifies all our problems and immeasurably increases our effectiveness. We can at once provide them with money and credit. We can carry on a vigorous campaign against German submarines and help keep the sea lanes open. We can increase our munition output for their benefit. We can raise the food that is the first necessity to them and to us. We can build ships. We can train an army under a system of selective compulsory service which will not demoralize industry and which will be ready for instant service if it is needed. We can put our house in order. We can be prudent and careful and economical of the nation's resources, making every pound of food and every dollar in money go as far as possible. We can be ready to aid the government in whatever capacity it may decide.

Most of these things are not spectacular. They are not heroic in accordance with popular notions of heroism. They have little to do with the traditional pomp and ceremony of war, but they are the things that count, and nowhere else do they count for so much as in the trenches.

Not the least of the great lessons that this war has taught to mankind is that the most modest and humble service may be the highest duty that patriotism can exact.

30,000 FEET LUMBER BEING HAULED TO BLUE LEDGE

Thirty thousand feet of lumber is being hauled to Palmer creek and to the Blue Ledge mine by the owners of the mine. A good part of this lumber is to be used in the construction of ore bins at Palmer creek, where it is proposed to erect these bins in such a manner as to enable the teamsters who are hauling ore from the mine to Palmer creek to dump their loads into the bins, thus doing away with the tedious and time consuming task of handling the ore
