

WORKING OUT PLANS FOR SENDING ARMY TO FRANCE

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The administration plans in regard to sending an army to France have not been definitely worked out. They will be concluded after the conference now in progress with envoys of England and France.

It is expected that the European military authorities will ask the United States to cooperate financially and industrially only during the first year.

In these ways can the United States best help our allies. That is why the administration favors selective conscription.

At the present time there is little prospect that hotbloods who would like adventure and who would like to carry the American flag to the trenches in France will be satisfied.

There will be much training at home, much preparation, but little of the spectacular or the bloody.

UNCLE SAM CHOOSING ONLY PHYSICALLY PERFECT TO GUIDE AIR FLEETS IN BATTLE

Steel Nerves, Non-Quaking Heart, Perfect Eyes and Ears, Ability as a Mechanic, Wireless Operator and Utter Fearlessness in Handling Machine Through Perils.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., April 21.—Being an army aviator is no joke.

It is no joke to pass the physical tests required for admission to the army, or the extra tests given prospective birdmen.

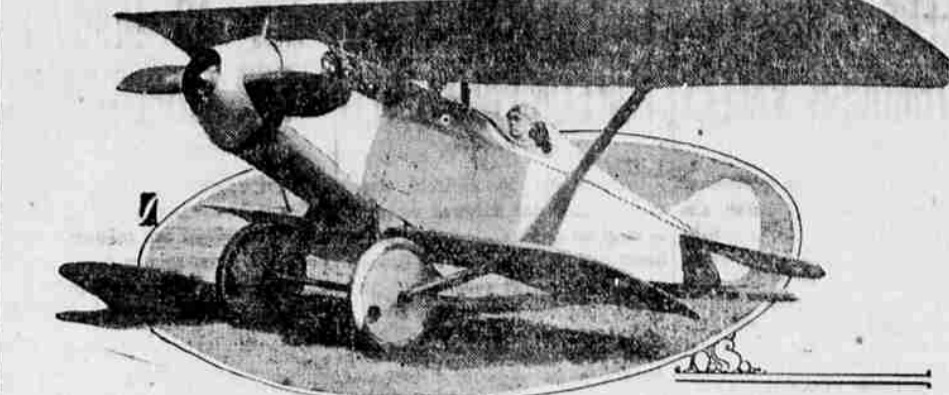

Least jocular of all is taking your life in your hands and piloting a great flying machine into the air a mile above old mother earth.

Two Classes Trained. The U. S. Signal Corps Aviation school at North Island, across the bay from San Diego, has already trained two classes of 19 junior military aviators—called J. M. A. among the fliers—since Jan. 1.

Before the end of 1917 several hundred army officers, army enlisted men, national guardsmen and flying reserve corps men will have learned to navigate the air at this camp.

Probably also navy fliers will be trained at North Island, plans being on foot to consolidate the flying arms of the army and navy, to familiarize the men of each service with both land and water machines.

Married and single men are eligible for the aviation corps. After passing the army tests, which demand a body of nearly physical perfection, determined by minute inspection, tests of all vital organs, blood pressure and ability to undergo fatiguing exercise without heart acceleration, the candidate must take the tests demanded for aviation qualification.

Nerves of Steel. His nerves must be of steel. If he started at a pistol shot fired close behind him the applicant was formerly disqualified. This is still a test with some European aviation schools, though it is not now used on this side of the Atlantic.

Unless his sense of balance is perfect he cannot be a successful aviator. To try the sense of balance. Apply the "vestibular test."

Pour water in his ears. If his middle ear, where the sensation of balance has its origin, is normal, pouring in cold water will make the eyes flutter away from that side, while water at 104 degrees Fahrenheit will cause the eyeball to act in the opposite way. He must be able to hear a whisper or low conversation at a distance of 20 feet.

His eyes must be perfect. As well as being required to read small print at stated distance, without the aid of glasses, he is tried for ability to distinguish colors.

Preliminary Joy Ride. He must be able to hop, blindfolded, back and forth without any considerable deviation from a line. He must be able to stand perfectly balanced on one foot.

When accepted for flying instructions, the student is taken for a "Joy ride" to acquaint him with the air. On his second trip he is given one of the controls to handle. After six or seven hours "aloft" he is turned loose and allowed to take up a machine alone.

Having completed ten hours actual work in the air he takes his tests for elementary pilot's license, consisting of flying a figure 8 around towers, 1600 feet apart, gliding to earth from an altitude of 700 feet, with the motor dead, and stopping within 150 feet of a certain point.

The student aviator learns all about the motors of airplanes, and the construction of the machines. He must be able to make a systematic hunt for trouble. He must be able to make emergency repairs. He must be able to send and receive wireless messages at the rate of fifteen words a minute.

Elementary Tests. Passing the elementary tests, the aviator receives practice in advanced flying in preparation for the "J. M. A." These tests include 90-mile cross country flights, steering by compass; landing in strange fields; stopping the motor while 1500 feet up and spiraling right and left, finally landing within 150 feet of a mark.

The airplanes used in instruction work are Curtiss tractor biplanes, with 100 horse power eight cylinder motors. These planes will climb 3500 feet in ten minutes.

Graduating at a Junior Military Aviator, the soldier has completed his aerial academy schooling, and is ready for assignment to active flying duty.
