JACKSONVILLE TO LOSE CROSSINGS

The street crossings which made Jacksonville famous and which effectively barred the touring and visiting public from the county seat will soon be only a memory, the city officials having decided upon their abolition. Instead of driving traffic away, the historic old town is going to make a bid for it by an extensive program of improvements.

The main streets are to be graded and graveled, and drinking fountains installed across from the city hall and court house. Graveling operations are already underway and within a few weeks Jacksonville will be as much sought by the autoist as it has been avoided.

The crossings, which did the business, were concrete inventions that stood up a foot above the grade of the street, to be sure that one could cross without muddy feet, it evidently having been figured out by the enterprising inventor, that the streets were a sea of mud. But about the time the crossings were built, it ceased raining and mud hasn't bothered Jacksonville since.

COUNTY DEFENSE COUNCIL PLANS FOOD CAMPAIGN

The Jackson County Agricultural Defense council, which was called into a special meeting in this city this afternoon by County Pathologist Cate, enjoyed a tasty luncheon at the high school this noon, served by the domestic science class of the school under direction of the teacher, Miss Grace Mitchell.

H. W. Campbell, the famous expert farm adviser, was a guest of honor at the luncheon. Immediately following the luncheon the council went into a business session at which Mr. Cate outlined the food preparedness plans of the state council for this county. The county council is made up of representatives from every grange and farmers association of the county, and representatives were present from each of these organizations, about twenty-two in all.

Every district in the county was represented. Mr. Cate also gave instructions for the delegates as to what to do in their respective districts next Saturday, which has been designated as Agricultural Day in Oregon by Governor Withycombe, in the way of gathering information as to the needs of the districts and in the way of disseminating information on that day as to best seeds to be used and where they can be obtained.

The gathering adjourned in time to hear Mr. Campbell's lecture at the armory, which was begun at 2:30 o'clock.
