WASHINGTON, July 5.—Clothing and camp equipment for the first million men of the new armies will be delivered by September 1, the tentative date of the mobilization of the first increment of the national army. A statement issued by the war department says that adequate supplies for all the national guards and national army will be available by the time the troops are called out.

The department already has equipped 300,000 men, national guards and regulars, and the troops in France have with them stores to last six months.

The main shortage was in tentage material. The original plan of putting the national guard in cantonments, the statement says, was due to this. It was abandoned when, with the co-operation of the supply committees on the national defense council, Quartermaster General Sharpe was able to procure what was needed.

waved handkerchiefs or flags, while everywhere along the route sounded the acclaim of the French people. The people called out affectionately "Sammies" and "Teddies." The name "Teddy" became suddenly popular as an expression of good will, perhaps because it is easily pronounced by the French.

Children from all the primary schools in the quarter were given the best places. Along part of the Avenue Daumesnil there were thousands of them calling "Teddy," "Teddy," "Teddy," and throwing flowers. The American soldiers affected by all this enthusiasm smiled and waved their hands at the children.

At LaFayette's Tomb.

French military men frequently commented on the appearance of the American soldiers, their snappy marching gait and their soldierly air.

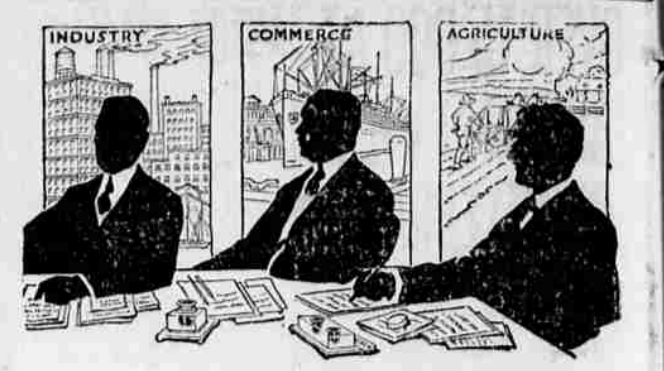

The mounted Republican guard joined the escort near the city hall, where the parade was reviewed by the municipal council. General Pershing and his staff were received there at the same time. The crowds in the great open places near the city hall were massed so densely that the authorities had difficulty in keeping the line of march open.

At Piepus cemetery, where General La Fayette is buried, the American troops passed through the arched gateway to the old convent, where they rested in the large garden. In the little burial ground adjoining were gathered three or four hundred persons, including prominent Americans and Frenchmen.

Bills of Fare.

In celebration of Independence day restaurants throughout Paris put dishes suggesting America on their bills of fare, such as chicken a la Wilson, Independence cake, turbot La Fayette, American cream soup and peaches Rochambeau. The various theaters gave special Fourth of July performances, among them Comedie Francaise.

It was said at police headquarters by officials familiar with previous demonstrations that this was on a greater scale than any they have ever seen before. They declared that at least a million people must have seen the parade.
