

SPRAY TO KEEP APPLES FREE FROM CODLIN MOTHS

The last spray recommendations, issued on the 23d of July, stated that spraying for the second brood of worms should be finished by the first of this month. About that time the eggs commenced hatching and the maximum hatch for the brood probably was reached about the tenth of this month. From that date on there will be a gradual decrease in worms, but the brood will be continuous as long as the evening temperatures remain at 60 degrees or above.

The only safe course to pursue from now on is to keep the fruit covered. Always keep in mind that the fruit at this time is growing rapidly, so that new, unprotected surfaces are continuously being exposed to the attacks of the newly hatched worms. In order to keep the fruit reasonably well covered, the next spray should be applied three weeks to 25 days from the time the previous spray was first applied. Accordingly, this spray should be applied not later than the 25th. Those who sprayed sooner or later than recommended should govern themselves accordingly. Some want to pass up this next spray on the Bartlett because they are soon to be picked and because in most cases they are quite free from worms at the present time. To do so may mean that about picking time there will be many new worms entering the fruit, which certainly would be discouraging. Where picking will commence the coming week, spraying could be deferred until after the first picking.

Use the paste form of arsenate of lead at the rate of two pounds to 50 gallons of water and the powder one pound to the same quantity of water. Those interested might try an experiment by using double strength arsenate of lead in one or several tanks to determine if any better control is obtained. Comparative results can better be noted on apples than pears.
