

Senator Robinson's Stinging Rebuke to Senator La Follette

I have never been able to comprehend the mental processes of the men who thought that the armed neutrality bill under those circumstances was wrong or a violation of the duties of this government. I have never been able to comprehend that. It was the only alternative of war. If the armed neutrality bill had been promptly passed, in all probability Germany would have realized, despite her expenditure of enormous sums to corrupt American citizenship and to install the ideas of the Kaiser into our people, that the American people are loyal. Congress had the duty to give American citizens the right to protect themselves when unlawfully assailed on the high seas.

By a filibuster, by a resort to a method which formerly prevailed in the United States senate, but which has since been abolished, by the action of the senate—by a filibuster advised on the part of the senator from Wisconsin, who boasted of it in his St. Paul speech as reported in the document I have before me—he encompassed the defeat of the armed neutrality bill, with almost every senator in favor of it. Under the absurd, old, and worn-out tradition of unlimited debate in the senate of the United States, under "freedom of speech," if you please; under the system of debate which is not debate, but the mere foolishness of useless conversation, thru a filibuster the senator from Wisconsin defeated that great measure.

Mr. President, I am glad that the day will probably never return when one senator or a few senators can accomplish such purposes as that by an abuse of the privileges of the senate. The right of unlimited debate merely means that any senator who gets the floor may talk just as long as he pleases on any subject he chooses, and nobody but Almighty God can interfere with him; and the Lord never seems to take notice of him in the exercise of that function. By a filibuster the desire of the American people, the desire of the president, the desire of congress was prevented from registering itself, and the Kaiser chuckled, for the filibuster did just as well for him as if he, the crown prince, Hindenburg, and Ludendorff had been seated on the floor of the United States senate. The Kaiser might well have said: "We do not need to be there ourselves. We thwarted the will of the American people. We bought and persuaded enough citizens and their representatives in the United States to prevent the government of the United States from protecting the rights of its citizens and vindicating its sovereignty."

Congress reconvened and it was apparent to everybody that war was close at hand. We did not declare war on Germany, but simply said that the time has come when we must recognize a state of war that Germany has forced on us. We will not go to war, but we recognize the fact that war has come to us. So we began a systematic preparation for this gigantic conflict. There were those in the senate here, there were some men in the country who did not realize what the conflict meant. They seem not to realize it yet; but, sir, my opinion is that if meant and still means a test of the strength and permanence of American institutions. It is no time to talk of peace when the Hun is at our gates. It is no time to talk of peace when the Hun is boasting of his victory. The time to talk of peace is when the armies of France, Russia, Britain and Italy, and the United States, are driving the German army back across the Rhine and making Germany feel what ruthless warfare means by imposing on the German people some of the burdens which have fallen on France and Poland and Belgium.

Some have said, and the spirit of the address of the senator from Wisconsin has been, that we are in an unholy and questionable alliance with Great Britain and France. I have been amazed at the sacrifice and the resolution with which the British people have met this contest. At the beginning of the war Great Britain was totally unprepared and that is the best proof that she was not expecting a conflict with Germany. On the other hand, for 35 years Germany had been arming and training and preparing for the great conflict. German leaders had been investigating to see how they could best strike France and Great Britain and the United States. England was resting in fancied security. When Germany invaded Belgium and France, England went to the rescue, not alone from a spirit of humanity, and resentment against outrages that were being perpetrated, but with the knowledge that it was necessary to do so in order to preserve her own existence. What did gallant France do? You may read human history from the beginning until now and you will never find a record of a braver struggle than the French people have made.

If you know anything, if you have thought that you can organize the disgruntled, semi-disloyal elements of the United States and run for the presidency on a platform of disloyalty. It cannot be done. You can not even start the running, much less win. That flag stands for justice—justice at home and liberty abroad. That flag never was lifted in a nobler cause than in the present conflict with Germany. If you can not agree with this statement, for God's sake so familiarize yourself with current events as to escape the fearful responsibility of misrepresenting your country and its leadership before the American people.

A day of judgment is coming. The duty of every citizen, whether he is an officer or a private citizen, is to support his government. He has the right to lead a revolution—the God-given right. If I believed, as the senator from Wisconsin has asserted, that this war was inspired for the benefit of the house of Morgan, and by the munition makers, and to guarantee the right of an American citizen to sail on vessels bearing munitions, I would not support the government. But I do not comprehend how any man, much less a senator, can make that statement, or seek to justify his questionable action on theories of that kind. History belies his statement; every circumstance known to students of current events shows that that declaration is a libel upon the government which he misrepresents. We have some duty, my fellow senators, besides the duty of talking. Some senators seem to think that there is a paramount obligation to exercise the speaking power, but there come times when men of judgment remain silent. Perhaps I have already talked longer than I am justified, but I have done my duty as I see it. I have no malice toward the senator from Wisconsin. I am a loyal American citizen, and the fact that I happen for a short time to occupy a seat in the United States senate has not so inflated my opinion of myself that I conceive I am empowered to disregard my duty and obligations to the people who have sent me here and to the people of this great republic. With me the first consideration is the honor of our flag and the safety of our nation. We are fighting in the noblest cause that can inspire human hearts with courage.

E'en now the vanguard gathers, E'en now we face the fray, Thou who didst help our fathers, Help Thou our hosts today; Fulfilled in signs and wonders, In life, in death made clear, Jehovah of the thunders, Lord God of battles hear.

Give us a name to fill the mind With the shining thoughts that lead mankind, The glory of learning, the joy of art, A name that tells of a splendid part In the long, long, toil and strenuous fight Of the human race to win its way, From the ancient shadows into the day Of freedom, brotherhood, equal right, A name like a star; A name of light! I give you France!

Give us a name to stir the blood With a swifter flow and a stronger flood, At the touch of a courage that conquers fear, A name that sounds like a trumpet clear, And silver sweet and iron strong, That brings three million men to their feet, Ready to march and steady to meet The foe who threatens that name with wrong, A name that rings like a battle song, I give you France.

Give us a name to move the heart With the strength that noble deeds impart; A name that speaks of the blood out-poured To save mankind from the sway of the sword, A name that calls on the world to share The burden of sacrificial strife, Where the cause at stake is the world's free life, And the rule of the people everywhere, A name like a star! A name of light! I give you France.

I am proud that, after the passing of the years, the United States, in the vindication of the rights of its citizens, in the protection of our flag and of our people from wrongs and insults by the German government, has joined hands with the gallant soldiers of France—France who has always been our friend. In the days of the revolution D'Estaing and Lafayette came with money and with men to uphold the cause of the colonists; and it was thru their contributions largely that victory finally came to the cause of American independence and civil liberty. Now, in this conflict we are fighting side by side with France, with Britain, with Russia, and with Italy.

But the failure of Russia, which I do not now anticipate, to bear her part of this great struggle can not bring success to the German cause, for in the end that cause is doomed. Pro-Germans in the United States, hired agencies of the German government, those who would betray their flag and their country, and those who are foolish enough not to know their duty, had better get to cover. There is no compromise on this issue. There are only two sides to this conflict—Germanism or Americanism—the Kaiser or the president. I want to know where you stand. I heard every word of the speech of the senator from Wisconsin, and I do not know where he stands. I read his speech as reported from St. Paul, and I do not know from it where he stands. The American people are wondering where he stands.

The hour has come for loyal Americans to assert their manhood. We do not want any half-hearted support of this flag. You had the right to question the wisdom of the war, if in your honest judgment you doubted it, but when congress passed the declaration of war, then, instead of going about the country and leaving your place on the floor of the senate, where duty calls you, instead of going over the country, stirring up sedition, and gathering together the discontented elements of the country, and seeking to inflame them against your flag, your country and your president; by God, you ought to stand here and support the flag and the president and help bring victory to American arms!

Mr. President, let no mistake be made. The congress and the people are loyal to this government. They do not regard the president of the United States as an usurper, who is trying to take over to himself the prerogatives of congress and the courts, and as a partner in the house of Morgan and of the munition makers. If that question were left to the people of the United States for a vote today they would say that Woodrow Wilson, by his courage, his capacity for leadership, his calm demeanor, his fearless conduct in the hour of peril, is entitled to a place with Washington, with Jefferson, and with Lincoln.

Do not deceive yourselves with the

for the campaign drive, which commences Monday next week. This movement for the preservation of the foodstuffs is not only a lesson in economy, but is also educational. The movement is not for the purpose of depriving us of useful food, but an attempt to make the housewife more economical in her cooking, to enthrone in her a desire to experiment with other grains. Shorts makes a fine substitute for either flour or Graham; corn and oats makes equally as good muffins or gems, and we are glad to do this for the benefit of those who have not been able to plant and harvest crops in the past few years as we in the United States have.
