BORROWED MAYOR'S OVERCOAT KEPT IT

"Seen John Carkin or Fred Mears yet?" shouted Mayor Gates as he jumped off the train this forenoon, having arrived home from attending the war conference at Portland. "Where's Hiltson? I'll fix 'em." His teeth chattered with cold.

He then explained that yesterday morning in Portland he lent his overcoat to Carkin who with Mears took in the scenic ride tendered the delegates to the mayors and city attorneys convention. John had thoughtlessly gone to Portland wearing a mid-summer suit and the weather had turned very chilly. Carkin and Mears intended to go to Salem yesterday afternoon and to board the train there last night and come on to Medford with the mayor. But the latter saw neither one of them again after parting with his overcoat yesterday morning.
