Canning Pimentos

Many women recently have called the office of the home demonstration agent asking about the canning of pimentos. Commercial canned pimentos are expensive, and they should be canned at home whenever possible. The canned pimentos can be used in many ways in salads, meat substitute loaves, in sandwich fillings, and in relishes. Pimentos add an appetizing flavor and an attractive color to any food to which they are added.

To can pimentos pick the ripe peppers the same day they are to be canned. The medium-sized ones may be canned whole, but irregular and canned. Remove the seeds by cutting around the stem with a paring knife and take out the inside partitions. To peel the peppers, place them in a hot oven from six to ten minutes (until the skin blisters and cracks) being careful not to allow them to burn. The skin can then be easily removed with a paring knife. Flatten the peppers and pack in jars in horizontal layers. No liquid is used in canning pimentos. The cooking in the jars brings out a thick sauce which almost covers them to the jars. A little salt to each jar may be added if desired. Adjust jars and sterilize for 45 minutes in hot water bath.
