THE GREAT POWER IDEA.

SPEAKING of a league of nations Viscount Grey, who was British foreign minister when war was declared, says: "All must learn the lesson of this war. The United States and the Allies cannot save the world from militarism unless Germany learns the lesson thoroughly and completely."

Germany has sustained complete defeat. If the new republic has come to stay and Hohenzollernism has gone forever, Germany has learned the lesson that militarism does not pay.

Militarism means the rule of might, the oppression and enslavement of weaker peoples, which reached its highest development under the German kaiser.

The Great Power idea is that each state is in conflict with all other states in a contest of greed and grab and is diametrically opposed to the ideals of democracy and the welfare of humanity.

At the outbreak of the war, the allied nations were almost as much tainted with the Great Power idea as Germany.

A league of nations will have to substitute a central control in which diplomatic and military forces must be pooled and represent the whole of mankind.

Unless the world has learned and can apply the lesson that "militarism has become the deadly enemy of mankind," the nations are ready to abandon the "world power" idea.

The necessity of President Wilson, who fathered the league of nations idea, attending the peace congress, is apparent to all, for as Mr. Wells says, "The United States is a republic, with a president capable of speaking plainly to the people of the earth, in a manner which is enough to produce an epidemic of epilepsy in European foreign offices."

M'ADOO'S RESIGNATION.

IT IS to be regretted that William G. McAdoo has resigned his multifarious duties as secretary of the treasury and director-general of the railroads.

To Mr. McAdoo is largely due the federal reserve bank law, which enabled the nation to weather successfully the crisis of a world war without a financial panic.

To Mr. McAdoo's financial efforts has been added the tremendous task of successfully unifying and co-ordinating the railroads of the country under the strain of war.

No one man can successfully carry the burdens imposed upon Mr. McAdoo and it is small wonder that the strain proved too much.

All of these activities had for their purpose the replacing of American-made goods with German-made goods after the war.

Since Europe has been practically eliminated from the Mexican trade during the war Mexico has learned to depend upon the United States for many things previously purchased abroad.

HUNS CHANGED STREET NAMES IN OCCUPIED CITIES

WITH THE BRITISH-AMERICAN FORCES IN FRANCE, Nov. 23.—That Germany expected to occupy for a long time, and perhaps permanently, the northern portion of France, is shown by the fact that the Hun military authorities changed the names of all the important streets in the larger towns which fell into their hands.
