

GODOWSKY CHARMS MUSIC LOVERS BY CONCERT AT PAGE

(By Jeanette Butler.)

To write a criticism of last evening's concert, with the ordinarily-accepted definition of the word in mind, would be preposterous. It is not for the small-town musician hungering for inspiration, the starved artist-soul for satisfaction, to criticize the acknowledged master of the piano, named such by his fellow artists as well as the musical populace of two continents. We leave that privilege to the musical critics of the big city dailies, satiated and wearied by innumerable recitals and concerts, amateur and professional, their verdict often biased by their digestion, enigma in its acute form or the mood of the moment.

To us, Mr. Godowsky was eminently satisfactory. If the question arises as to which of his qualities is superior, one would be compelled to choose between his sanity, his supreme artistry, his poetic interpretation, or faultless and incomparable technique. His contemporaries are correct. Leopold Godowsky combines all the requisites to his present attainment—the greatest of living pianists. We were not given a hackneyed program. We were played down to—a little? One big number would have been appreciated. In all probability we should have changed our views of the offering, however, had we been accorded that privilege as the pianist, comparable to the great ones of the speaking stage, has the faculty of causing the most difficult feats of pianistic execution to look and sound like "child's play."

His octave work was stupendous, the passages for left-hand marvellously played, his climaxes, a wonderful lesson in controlled power and his pianissimo efforts—perfection. Only hours upon hours of patient perseverance could have accomplished results shown in the thermal quality of that exquisite pianissimo.

A proof of his well-balanced mentality was the wholesome sense of humor revealed in his own dainty conceits—Humoresque from Miniatures. Complexities in the man's nature are manifested however. Now you know him—now you don't. But all the time you like him—oh, very very much.

A responsive audience must have pleased the artist. The program was truly of the allies. The French, Franck and Debussy, the Polish, Chopin and the American McDowell, Schubert of the Romantic school, was the only representative of music "beyond the Rhine."

It is deplorable that every music student could not have been present at the concert. The numbers could almost have been chosen with the one idea of the helpfulness, so wise was the selection, so indicative of Mr. Godowsky's comprehension of just what was needed for a community of this sort.

Mrs. Hughes, who is an assistant of Leopold Aber, added to the evening's enjoyment. She is thoroughly musical and gave a scholarly reading of the Sonata.

MEDFORD YOUTH DIES OVERSEAS IN ARMY SERVICE

A telegram from Washington was received Monday by J. M. Lofland, announcing the death of his son Fay, October 25th, from a sudden attack of pneumonia. Friday, a letter came from his sergeant confirming the report.

Fay was a native of Jackson county, would have been 19 years old December 24th. He was one of the first volunteers from Medford, enlisting with Company 7, at first stationed at Fort Columbia. He sailed for France August 14th. His older brother George, is also in service in France. Besides his father and mother, he leaves six brothers and two sisters, who have the deepest sympathy of the community.

The following letter shows the regard in which Fay was held by his associates:

Somewhere in France,
Oct. 27, 1918.

Mr. and Mrs. Lofland,
809 W. Tenth St.,
Medford, Ore.

I am writing you a short note to offer my heartfelt sympathy in your bereavement over the recent death of your son, Fay.

It was a great shock to us, because we had heard he was getting along so well.

He will be greatly missed by his many friends in the battery because he was a good, clean type of young man whom anyone would be proud to associate with and a very conscientious soldier.

We were all very sorry indeed, to lose him. Very sincerely,

POWER COMPANY READY TO SERVE SAN FRANCISCO

The California-Oregon Power company has practically completed its power line connection between Castella and Kennett, says the Siskiyou News. The heavy copper cables are in place and the telephone wires have been strung. Power will be delivered to the Kennett smelter next week.

The Mammoth Copper company at present is the largest customer of the Northern California Power company here. When the California-Oregon Power company turns on the current at the Kennett smelter and the Mammoth mine the Northern California Power company will switch its current hitherto going to Kennett to the southward and deliver it to the Pacific Gas and Electric for San Francisco bay consumption. The Northern can not deliver all the power released for the Pacific Gas and Electric is not quite ready in Colusa county to receive it.

The California-Oregon Power company has more power than it can sell in its territory. The Pacific Gas and Electric does not have enough to meet its needs.

HOPE HELD OUT FOR CHROME MINERS

On November 22 President Wilson issued an executive order placing the war minerals administration in the hands of the bureau of mines where it rightfully belongs, since the war industries board will soon cease to exist. This is an important step for the chrome producer.

On the chrome situation the current number of the Mining and Scientific Press says: "Consumers are still trying to break through the order prohibiting imports of cheap chrome from New Caledonia. It is estimated that the consumption is 95,000 tons and the domestic production 75,000 tons per annum, so that there is no excess of domestic ore. Stocks are said to be not excessive considering the plans of the government for sustaining industries. No shipping is available for importing minerals, and restrictions on automobile manufacture have been removed, thereby re-establishing an important channel for consumption. The demand for war minerals is likely to be larger next year, and under the war minerals act the purchases by the government can be protected by duty; in short, conditions favor the absorption of the American production if the war minerals act is administered firmly, as we may now expect."

WORK OF MILITARY COMMITTEE OVER SAYS CHAMBERLAIN

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—"Our work is done. We have been severely criticized by some. We have lost some friends. We have made some gains. Our effort has always been to help; never to hinder. I believe we have been vindicated."

Senator Chamberlain today thus summed up the work of the senate military affairs committee, of which he is chairman, during the war period.

"We have had a fearless committee," he said. "With less courageous men our achievement would have been impossible. Now that the war is over, and investigations will be made to criticize and not to assist, I am, in a way, glad to relinquish the chairmanship."

Warren May Succeed Him

Senator Chamberlain will retire as chairman of what has been the most important committee of congress during the last year and a half when the republicans came into power on March 4. He may be succeeded by Senator Warren, father-in-law of General Pershing. No man in congress has been more severely criticized than Senator Chamberlain, although his colleagues believe he did more to assist in winning the war than any other legislator. His controversy with the president, following his assertion that the government had "fallen down" in the conduct of the war, provided many sensations.

"Scandals growing out of the war cannot be avoided," Senator Chamberlain said. "Many conditions will be revealed within the next six months that probably will shock the country. The public will be shown where there has been seemingly unwarranted extravagant expenditures and will condemn those responsible for it, without taking into account the pressing need in their work."

From this time forward the military affairs committee will have little to do, Senator Chamberlain believed. The forthcoming army bill will be of far less interest than those enacted during the war, he said.

Wilson Has Power to Act

"President Wilson has practically all the power he needs to proceed with demobilization," he continued. "The various bureaus created during the war can be consolidated with other bureaus under the Overman act, and their service practically terminated. The draft law—which was the most important piece of war legislation passed by congress—becomes inoperative with the proclamation of peace."

The army should not be demobilized too rapidly, Senator Chamberlain said. It would be necessary to maintain a large force—the exact numbers to be determined by General Pershing—in Europe until the peace treaty is signed.

The absorption of army men and war workers in civil employments was perhaps the most important problem confronting the country at this time, he added. The cancellation of war contracts on which great numbers of men are employed could not be pushed too rapidly, he believed. Whether the threatened suits over the cancellation of contracts would develop depends upon the foresight with which the contracts were drawn by the war department.

Effects of Peace in Oregon

"The sudden stopping of spruce production for airplanes has thrown between 20,000 and 30,000 men out of work in Oregon," Chamberlain said. "Contracts for 77 ships have been cancelled, withdrawing the employment of another 7,000 men. The need of foreign governments for shipping will be great, and I am urging the shipping board to continue construction work on these vessels with the idea of selling them after peace is declared. I believe the restrictions on construction of ships for foreign order should be immediately withdrawn. This would ease the situation somewhat. The northwest was the home of the I. W. W., now happily out of business. However, with great numbers out of work, it will soon develop again and prove an even greater menace than it was in the past."

WASHINGTON MEETS OREGON AT SEATTLE

SEATTLE, Nov. 30.—University of Washington was to send a crippled team against the University of Oregon here today in what was expected to be the final football clash of the northwest inter-collegiate season.

Despite the fact substitutes have replaced four of Washington's injured regular players, local football authorities looked for a close game. They pointed to the fact that both teams have scored wins over the Oregon Agricultural college. Oregon's players expected to win by a good score today.

The skies were cloudy early today but the players hoped rain would hold off until the end of the game.

SOUTHERN OREGON POULTRY SHOW TO OPEN DECEMBER 18

The Southern Oregon Poultry association will hold their fourth annual show on December 18, 19 and 20, at Medford. The officers and directors are making large preparation for this event and expect to make it the best one ever given in southern Oregon.

The shows held by this association for the last three years have resulted in greatly improving most of the flocks of this valley, as to stype, stamina and for egg production.

Breeders, condition your birds and make your entries early that the superintendent of the show may prepare for them.

All members of the association are requested to meet at the library building next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock to talk over plans for the coming event.

FLU EPIDEMIC IN KLAMATH WORSE

KLAMATH FALLS, Nov. 30.—With many new cases of the Spanish influenza reported by the various physicians in Klamath Falls, and a considerable number from the outside district also, Mayor C. B. Crisler declares it will be impossible to open the town until the condition of health has improved.

The mayor believes that to throw the bars down now would be liable to bring about a situation worse than has existed here at any time heretofore. He reports that Merrill, 23 miles south of here, which has so far escaped the epidemic almost entirely, now has 25 cases.

DRAINED KLAMATH LANDS SURVEYED

KLAMATH FALLS, Nov. 30.—An indication of an early opening to settlement of the public lands now being reclaimed from the bed of Lower Klamath lake, a few miles south of this city, is the arrival of Surveyor Fred Mench from the United States land office at Portland to make a survey of the lands that are now sufficiently drained. The survey is being made for the United States reclamation service.

It is believed that parts of five or six townships now can be surveyed. Lower Klamath lake is being reclaimed by closing the gate in Klamath Straits where it is crossed by the Southern Pacific railroad line. Some of the lands are now sufficiently drained for pasture purposes. A portion of it is privately owned while some remains public domain. A national bird preserve also covers a portion of this area.

furnished their toil to the soldiers at the front.

"To many fame has come. New names have been inscribed on the roll of the immortals. To all have come a new outlook on life, a clearer perspective regarding its obligations, a more exalted conception of duty and honor and a deeper sense of responsibility to the nation and to God.

New Vision of Service

"May we give thanks that unselfish service has given us this new vision, that we are able to return to our fireside and our country with higher aims and a firmer purpose alike enabling to ourselves and to those who have held long vigil and have prayed for us that we might worthily represent them.

"This spirit that has won the victory is to become a permanent and indispensable mainstay of peace and happiness. It is not a matter of individual choice but of obligation, that we should proudly carry it back with us. If the glory of our military service has been a spontaneous offering of loyalty, it is too precious to be cast aside by indulgence and too sacred not to be cherished always.

"Our nation awaits the return of its soldiers, believing in the stability of character that has come from self-discipline and self-sacrifice. Confident of the new power that the stern school of war and discipline has brought to each of us, American mothers await with loving hearts their gallant sons. Great cause, indeed, have we to thank God for trials successfully met and victories won. Still more should we thank Him for the golden future, with its wealth of opportunity and its hope of a permanent national honor."
