PHOENIX SCHOOL NOTES "The Whites," one division of the literary society, gave an interesting and instructive program on scheduled time. The program was original in its make up which was composed of two scenes. The first scene represented Washington standing and observing Betty Ross making the United States flag. The second scene represented a family sitting around the reading table. Some of the members of the family were knitting, some reading, some talking. During the evening, now and then a member of the family would read or recite from Lincoln, Lowell or Longfellow. Thus the birthdays of four great Americans were celebrated.

Friday afternoon the grades and high school assembled in the auditorium for song service and readings which comes at regular times during the month. But this particular time was full of interest for all of the pupils as Mr. Milan had told them that something would happen that had never happened before in the Phoenix school. Visitors were present, as the children had told their folks at home. Number after number was called off and each and all had done their part well. All realized that the program was coming to a close, but nothing unusual had occurred, when the principal said a few words about the call coming to the Phoenix school to write on the subject why we should buy "Liberty Bonds," and each pupil who was able to write answered the call willingly, but perhaps we felt that we had not done much, but when he said that our boys at the front had gone over the top and Phoenix school had gone over also, thus presenting four silver medals. It would have done your heart good to have heard those boys and girls cheer. The medals were presented to Esther Miller and Helen Norris of the high school, Irene Chaudet and Frances Cope of the grades.

Supt. G. W. Ager visited the schools one day last week. He expressed himself as well pleased with work of the school. The advanced manual training pupils have been repairing and making improvements on the school building the last few weeks. Arrangements are being made to have some of the boys take black-smithing part of the time. Prof. Milan was elected secretary of the athletic club, which was organized at Ashland last Saturday. It was decided to have a field meet this spring at Talent.
