

ARTILLERY JUST STARTED FIGHTING WHEN WAR OVER

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Behind the armies in France which smashed a road to victory through the German defenses last fall, the United States was fighting before the armistice was signed, weapons gigantic and powerful, counted upon to make ultimate victory certain. In the American artillery program alone, the full fruition of which could not have been reached before 1920, there was in creation an agency believed by army men here to be of itself able to bring the victory.

An official and detailed account of that program is contained in the chapters made public today of "America's Munitions," the historical report prepared under the direction of Assistant Secretary Crowell, who was director of munitions during the war. The whole story of guns, from the 37 mm "infantry cannon" with an inch and one-half bore, designed for use in the front lines of combat, to the 16-inch mortar on a railway mount which was to work havoc on the enemy from points miles behind the fighting front, the story of the extraordinary efforts of American industry to equip an army with artillery on a scale never before attempted is graphically pictured. Through it all runs the same spirit of partnership in the war enterprise between industry and the government that made possible such an undertaking.

Among the many interesting things in the report is the account now officially given of the reasons that impelled the war department to cast aside except for training purposes all of the 3-inch field artillery with which the American army was equipped when the United States entered the war, and to substitute for these weapons three types of guns fitted to take ammunition of the 75mm type employed by the French light pieces.

There has been much controversy because of the alleged failure to adopt at the outset of the war the French 75, famous for its performance in the war, as the standard American piece of this type. The report shows that the gun was adopted for combat purposes, but that its production in quantity in the United States proved to be even more of a problem than the government's experts had anticipated. For that reason the American 3-inch gun, redesigned for 75 ammunition, and the British 3.3-inch field gun, similarly redesigned, were both put into production in order to make use of every facility for manufacture. The American and British type were intended primarily for training work and were so employed.

IF HAIR IS TURNING GRAY, USE SAGE TEA

Here's Grandmother's Recipe to Darken and Beautify Faded Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold. Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients at a small cost, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair. Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally, by the addition of nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.
