had now been put to the lips of all peoples, and they have drunk and were refreshed.

"And it is a delightful thought to believe that these are fountains which spring up out of the soil of the Americas. I am not of course suggesting or believing that political liberty had its birth in the American hemisphere, because of course it had not, but the peculiar expression of its characteristic of the modern time, that broad republicanism, that genuine feeling and practice of democracy that is becoming characteristic of the modern world, did have its origin in America; and the response of the peoples of the world to this new expression is, we may perhaps pride ourselves, a response to an American suggestion.

Owe World a Service

"If that is true we owe the world a peculiar service. If we originated great practices we must ourselves be worthy of them. I remember not long ago attending a very interesting meeting which was held in the interest of combining Christian missionary effort throughout the world. I mean eliminating the rivalry between churches and agreeing that Christian missionaries should not represent this, that or the other church, but represent the general Christian impulse of the world. I said I was thoroughly in sympathy with the principle, but that I hoped if it was adopted that the inhabitants of the heathen countries would not come to look at us, because we were not ourselves united, but divided; that while we were asking them to unite, we ourselves did not set the example.

Americas Must Unite

"My moral from that recollection is this: We, among other friends of liberty, are asking the world to unite in the interest of brotherhood and mutual service and the genuine advancement of individual and corporate liberty throughout the world, and we must set the example.

"I will recall here to some of you an effort that I myself made some years ago, soon after I assumed the presidency of the United States, to do that very thing. I was urging that other states of America unite with the United States in doing something which very closely resembled the formation of the present League of Nations. I was ambitious to have the Americas do the thing first and set the example to the world of what we are now about to realize. I had a double object in it, not only my pride that the Americas should set the example and show the genuineness of their principles, but that the United States should have a new relation to the other Americas.

The Monroe Doctrine

"The United States upon a famous occasion warned the governments of Europe that it would regard it as an unfriendly act if they tried to overturn free institutions in the western hemisphere and to substitute their own systems of government which at that time were inimical to those free institutions; but while the United States thus undertook of its own free motion to be the champion of America against such aggression from Europe, it did not give any conclusive assurance that it would never be the aggressor. What I wanted to do in the proposals to which I have just referred was to offer to the other American states our own bond that they were safe against us and all illicit ambitions we might entertain, as well as safe, so far as the power of the United States could make them safe, against foreign nations.

"Of course I am sorry that happy consummation did not come but after all no doubt the impulse was contributed to by us which has now led to a sort of mutual pledge on the part of all the self governing nations of the world that they will be friends to each other, not only, but that they will take pains to secure each other's safety and independence and territorial integrity.

No Greater Thing

"No greater thing has ever happened in the political world than that, and I am particularly gratified tonight to think of the hours I have had the pleasure of spending with Mr. Pessoa as a member, along with him, of the commission on the League of Nations which prepared the covenant which was submitted to the conference. I have felt as I looked down the table and caught his eye that we had the same American mind in regard to the business, and when I made suggestions or urged arguments, that I felt were characteristically American, I would always catch sympathy in his eyes. When others did not catch the point at once, he always caught it, because though we were not bred to the same language literally, we were bred to the same political language and the same political thought and our ideas were the same.

Drinks to His Health

"It is, therefore, with a real sense of communion and of fellowship and of something more than neighborhood familiarity that I find myself in this congenial company and that I take my part with you in paying my tribute and extending my warmest best wishes to the great country of Brazil and to the gentleman who will worthily represent her in her presidential chair.

"I ask you to join with me in drinking the health of the president-elect of Brazil."
