ROASTS POSTAL FOR WORK IN WAR

WASHINGTON, June 5.—The manner in which the Postal Telegraph-Cable company handled government business out of Washington "at a crucial period through which the country was passing" would have justified the taking over of telegraph lines, Assistant Postmaster General Koons told the house interstate commerce committee at hearings on bills to return the properties to private management.

Mr. Koons said that if other companies had operated the same policy as the Postal it would have strangled the government in the conduct of the war.

LIMERICK GOES ON STRIKE WHEN BRITISH ARRIVE

LIMERICK, Ireland, May 5.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—This sleepy old city has resumed the even tenor of its way after an exciting experience with a government of strike leaders which seized the administration of the community's affairs and for a period of eleven days regulated the goings and comings of some 35,000 persons in the face of British soldiers and Irish constables.

The statement of one of the leaders that the "British can now see we do possess the ability to govern ourselves" may be taken as the real motive for their action. The controlling power in the leading Irish organizations desired to prove to the government the falsity of the repeated statement, that "Irishmen cannot govern themselves."

The Limerick experiment originated in an incident dating back to last year when members of the Royal Irish constabulary searched the house of a Limerick postal clerk and found a revolver. For this he was sentenced to a term in prison. There he refused food and soon it was necessary to remove him to the Clare workhouse to save his life.

There a party of his friends entered the hospital and clashed with the guard. One constable was shot dead, several others wounded, and the clerk also hit. He died within a few hours.

The military authorities learned that the dead clerk's friends were arranging to give him a military funeral at which all Limerick and Clare men were to appear in the uniform of their military organization the "Irish Volunteers." Orders were issued from the military headquarters in Limerick forbidding a military funeral. The Irish leaders decided to attend the funeral in their ordinary attire.

The funeral will never be forgotten in southern Limerick. All business houses were closed and the blinds tightly drawn. Factories and workshops also were closed, sending many persons to the streets.

At two o'clock parties of armed men appeared at strategic points in side streets off the line of march. At each important point an armored car was stationed, its guns commanding the route to be followed by the funeral procession.

The funeral was held at 3 p. m. and the march from the cathedral began.

No man were a uniform but they marched with the steady stride and perfect ranks of well drilled soldiers. Fifteen thousand of them were, with Mayor Alphonsus O'Mara and other city officials in the line.

The next day Limerick was proclaimed a "restricted area." Military lines had been established so dividing the city that workmen living in Clare and employed in Limerick must have passes to go into the city.

This angered the trade unionists, who declared they ought to have the right to go to and from work without the consent of the British government. The Trades and Labor Council called a general strike. A proclamation was issued closing every factory and store, and generally placing the activities of the city under control of the strike leaders. It was instantly obeyed, not a store or shop opening. Even the newspaper and moving picture houses were included in the suspension order.
