The fact that there was seven feet of snow at Crater Lake on March 31st and more falling at that time was contained in information sent Alexander Sparrow, superintendent of the Crater national park yesterday by Ranger Brown at the lake. This seems to dispel the outlook existing a month ago for a very much earlier opening of the Crater lake season than usual, and indicates that the season will open about as usual, July 1st. Last year on March 31st there was ten feet of snow at the lake and two years ago seven feet.
