RECORD GALE IS DEMORALIZING TO PEDESTRIANISM

An average 30-mile-an-hour gale in the city and valley during the night, and which continued today, caused much discomfort in walking and driving Saturday, kept windows and doors rattling around homes and business buildings, portable things blowing around yards and lots, and together with a cloudy sky, the prediction of rain and a falling barometer presaged another storm.

Only a well-trained athlete could negotiate the streets with any ease near a dignified pedestrianism this forenoon. One had hard work not only to keep his balance and the hat on his head, but in retaining a direct course for his destination, especially in turning corners. Women, especially, had a difficult time in walking and preventing their skirts from ascending skyward. Many men had interesting experiences in chasing their hats around town, and every one involuntarily speeded up his gait with the wind behind him or slowed down greatly in facing it.

So much wind in the past week is an unusual thing for the Rogue river valley and has all the old-time weather sharps guessing.

Mount Rainier was first scaled in 1870.

OREGON NEWSPAPER MEN ORGANIZE

SALEM, Ore., Jan. 29.—The Oregon Publishers' Syndicate, at a meeting here late yesterday, perfected an organization through the election of officers. George Putnam of the Salem Capital Journal was elected president; Lee Drake of the Astoria Budget vice president and E. L. Hurd of the Corvallis Gazette Times secretary and treasurer. The directors were: S. S. Smith, publisher of the Medford Sun; Bruce Dennis, publisher of the La Grande Observer; E. M. Raegen, publisher of the Albany Herald; and J. E. Shelton of the Eugene Guard.

The purpose of the syndicate, which represents more than 15 daily publications in Oregon, is to purchase stock and equipment in large quantities and at prices lower than now demanded by the jobbers.
