There are 12 feet of snow at the Crater Lake rim and 11 feet at Anna Spring camp five miles lower down, according to word received yesterday by Alex Sparrow, superintendent of Crater National park from the park ranger stationed there. This is seven more feet of snow than was in this region last year at this time and it is pretty well packed down. However, Mr. Sparrow says that does not necessarily mean a later opening of the Crater Lake season as the disappearance of the snow all depends on the weather.

Dr. J. F. Reddy is in the city from Medford, and is as optimistic as in days of yore. He predicts that all the good things Grants Pass hopes for will come in due time, and that every little while there is a new ripple affecting the railroad situation, and that the ripple will some day break into a real wave that will lay ties and rails and put steam in the boilers of the locomotives that will supplant old No. 1. Mr. Reddy is now interested in a highway contract in the state of California where he was the successful bidder for the building of eight miles between Colarville and Alturas at a cost of $110,000.
