Despite the fact that the fishing season opened last Friday and many men and women have since been going to the river and smaller streams to fish, it is interesting to note that, according to County Clerk Florey, only one-third as many fishing licenses have yet been taken as were issued at this time last year. This means that because the recent legislature increased the cost of a fishing license to $3 many people who go fishing are taking a chance of being caught, rather than pay the cost of a license. There has been general dissatisfaction over the increased cost of fishing and hunting licenses.

Now that improvement work on other county property in Jacksonville is being done, it might be suggested that proper screen placed on the upper windows of the county jail would do away with the possibility of unscrupulous parties slipping words of cheer and articles of utility to incarcerated friends. A recent grand jury strongly recommended that screens be placed on these windows as the apertures between the bars, while not wide enough to allow egress to a prisoner are ample to admit files, saws, arms and other little knick-knacks indispensable to a successful jail break.—Jacksonville Post.

When B. R. Pooley of Medford registered at the Portland two months ago, he was the personification of gloom. He was inclined to like his best friends if they came within reach, and acquaintances of long standing wondered what ailed him. Some of the more hardy ones advised him to see a specialist right away.

Mr. Pooley covers the territory between Eugene, Ore., and Redding, Cal. for a prominent Portland cereal manufacturing concern, and the reason he believed like a bear with a sore head when he was last in town was disclosed yesterday when he signed the book at the Portland and appeared the very button on fortune's cap, he was that radiant and happy. "There is a great improvement in business," he said. "Conditions throughout southern Oregon are much better. When I was here last business was rotten and I was pretty lue. I am feeling fine now, though. In my territory the corner has been turned."
